Palestine, pal-est-ee (L. Palaestina) or the Holy Land, a country of Asiatic Turkey, comprising the SW part of Syria. It borders on the Mediterranean Sea for a distance of about 150 miles, extending eastward to the Syrian Desert. On the N it has the region of the Lebanon, a line drawn from the mouth of the Litany (El-Kasimiyeh) through Mount Hermon (about lat. 35° 20' N.) being approximately the boundary on this side. Southward it extends to Asbia Petra, the boundary being a short distance to the S of the southern end of the Dead Sea. The country consists of two parts. Palestine W. of the Jordan and Palestine E. of the Jordan. The former has an area of somewhat more than 6000 sq. m. the latter has approximately half that extent. Palestine comprises four distinct regions: the Jordan valley, the mountain region to the W. of the Jordan, the plateau to the E. of the Jordan, and the coast-land. The most remarkable feature of the country is the great central depression of the Jordan valley (El-Ghor) apparently formed by a sudden collapse of the earth's crust, which extends like a deep fissure from N to S. throughout the greater part of the length of the country, and which is continued southward to the Gulf of Akabah under the name of El-Arabah. Its southern part is occupied by the Dead Sea whose surface is nearly 1300 feet below sea-level and whose bottom descends to about an equal depth. This lake, which is nearly 50 miles long, receives the waters of the Jordan and a few small streams, including the Arnon. Its waters hold in solution about six times as much salt as does sea-water. Where it enters Lake Huleh (the Waters of Merom) 84 miles (in a direct line) N of the Dead Sea, the Jordan is still 17 ft. above sea-level. Only 10 miles farther (in a direct line) where its waters spread out into the Lake of Tiberias (Sea of Galilee, Lake of Gennesaret) it is 690 ft. below the level of the sea. Thence in an extremely tortuous course it threads the bottom of the depression descending another 600 ft. The principal affluents of the Jordan are the Yarmuk and Jabbok, both from the E.

The highlands of Palestine may be regarded as continuations of the Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon. To the W. of the Dead Sea and the lower Jordan, forming the water-shed between the Jordan and the Mediterranean, is the mountain range known in its main portion as the highlands of Judah, extending in a N and S direction. For a great part of its length it presents a continuous plateau supporting low mountains. The highest summit, near Hebron is 3570 feet above the sea. In the N portion in Samaria, are Ebal and Gerizim 3077 ft. and 2840 ft. respectively. Jerusalem is situated near the middle of this mountain range, which has an abrupt descent towards the E. The slope towards the Dead Sea (which includes the Wilderness of Judah) is rocky barren and deeply cleft. The descent towards the W. is gradual. These highlands are continued southward by an elevated plateau. In the NW they resolve themselves into a region of hills, which dip down into the fertile plain of Esdraelon, elevated only about 250 ft. above the sea, above which rises on the SE. Mount Gilboa and on the NW Mount Carmel the latter a promontory like projection jutting into the Mediterranean. The coast-region to the W. of the hill country of Samaria is the Plain of Sharon. To the W. of the upper Jordan separated from the southern highlands by a lateral extension of the Jordan depression and by the plain of Esdraelon is the mountain region of Galilee, with peaks ranging from 1500 to 4000 ft. in elevation. Numerous deep river valleys (wadis) from the E. and W. have been cut into these mountain ranges. Most of them are generally dry except in their lower reaches. The whole of Palestine E. of the Jordan including Judah (anc. Gaditania) and the ancient Gilead, Ammon and Moab, is a plateau rising in terraces from the depression of the river valley and the Dead Sea and melting away on the E. into the Syrian Desert. Its highest eminence, in the N. has an elevation of a little more than 4000 ft. Among the peaks on this side of the Jordan are Gilead and Pisgah.

The rock formation of the surface of Palestine is for the most part a chalky limestone. The northern part of the plateau E. of the Jordan exhibits great fields of lava, and here extinct craters are visible. Palestine has been visited by earthquakes in historic times. The coast is very little indented, the only real bay being that of Acre, formed by the projection of Mount Carmel. The only considerable stream emptying into the Mediterranean is the Litany on the N. border of the country. The Bay of Acre receives the brook Kishon. Much of the soil of Palestine is naturally very fertile when sufficiently watered. The rainfall however has largely to be supplemented by artificial irrigation. Large tracts are adapted only to pasture or remain altogether barren. Much of the country presents a naked appearance. The mean annual rainfall is a little over 20 inches or about half of that of the eastern United States. There are two seasons of rainfall—a long one extending from October to February and a short one in the early spring. In nearly half a year there is no rainfall. The climate of the highlands, although the heat of summer is great, is on the whole beautiful. The heat in the Jordan valley is rendered almost unendurable by the humidity of the atmosphere. Palestine produces a great variety of vegetable products, including wheat, barley and other grains, beans, lentils, olives, apricots, almonds, figs and other sub-tropical fruits, grapes (which yield fine wine), dates, melons, cucumbers, onions, tomatoes, and other vegetables. With careful cultivation the country could support a vastly larger population than is found there. The flora is a rich combination of the flora of the Mediterranean region of temperate Europe, of the Asiatic deserts and steppes, and of the tropics. The mountains are in places covered with forests but the higher elevations are generally bare. But few large carnivorous animals are now left in Palestine. Wild goats are numerous. Large numbers of sheep and goats are reared on the pastures. Agriculture, on the whole, is in a very backward state. In recent times German and Jewish agricultural colonies have been established in Palestine with good results. Among the latter founded mainly by people fleeing from persecution in Russia and Rumania, are Zikron Ya'akov, Petah Tikvah, Bishan le-Zion and Rehoboth all near the coast, and Metullah and Rosh Pinar, in the interior in the extreme N. A railway connects Jerusalem with the port of Jaffa and another line connects the upper Jordan valley with the port of Haifa. The Damascus-Mecca railway in course of construction, is in operation along the eastern borders of Palestine. The population of Palestine is probably not far from 750,000 and consists of Syro-Arabians, Christians, and Jews.

The name Palestine (first applied to the country by the Greeks) is derived from that of the Philistines (Hebrew Peleset) the inhabitants of the S. part of the coast-land. The name by which the country was known to its Hebrew possessors is Canaan. Neither Canaan nor Palestine was:

political designation. The Hebrews obtained the mastery over the Canaanites, who were slowly assimilated to them in speech and who were ruled by a number of petty kings, about 1200 B.C. Much later the subjugation of the Philistines was gradually effected. The division of Palestine according to the Hebrew tribes was as follows: Palestine W. of the Jordan comprised Simeon, Judah, Dan and Benjamin in the S., Ephraim and half of Manasseh in the center and Asher, Naphtali, Zebulun and Issachar in the N. Palestine E. of the Jordan comprised Gad, Reuben, and half of Manasseh. The coast-land to the N. of Philistia was inhabited by the Philistines. To the S. of the Hebrews were Edom (Idumea) and the country of the Amalekites. To the E. of the Dead Sea were the Moabites and Ammonites. On the E. border of northern Palestine was Bashan. Adjoining Palestine on the N. was the Aramaean kingdom of Damascus which was destroyed by the Assyrians at about the same time as the kingdom of Israel. About the middle of the tenth century B.C. the Hebrew kingdom was rent in twain—Israel in the N. Judah in the S. The kingdom of Israel, whose capital was Samaria, was destroyed by the Assyrians about 722 B.C. The kingdom of Judah suffered the same fate at the hands of the Babylonians who took and destroyed Jerusalem in 586 B.C. Half a century later Palestine became part of the Persian Empire and the Jews returned from the Babylonian Captivity. Palestine was subjected by Alexander of Macedon in 332 B.C. After the disruption of the empire of Alexander it constituted a possession of Egypt and at the beginning of the second century B.C. was annexed to the kingdom of Syria (kingdom of the Seleucids). Under the rule of the successors of Alexander Greek cities sprang up in Palestine. The Jews rose against the Syrian kings under the lead of the Maccabees (Asmoneans) in 167 B.C. and after a struggle of a quarter of a century a hereditary Jewish realm was established in southern Palestine. Its limits were extended by conquest until it embraced nearly all of Palestine, together with Idumea. The Asmonean realm became the kingdom of Judaea. From 63 B.C. Judaea was a dependency of Rome. In 37 B.C. Herod the Great put an end to the rule of the Asmoneans and established the Idumean dynasty which ruled under the overlordship of Rome. At the beginning of the Christian era the main divisions of Palestine were Judaea, Samaria, and Galilee, occupying respectively the southern, central and northern portions of the region W. of the Jordan and Perea, E. of the Jordan. In A.D. 66 the Jews rose against the Roman rule, the war terminating with the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. In A.D. 132-135 occurred the great insurrection under Bar Cochba, which was followed by the dispersion of the Jews. On the final division of the Roman Empire (A.D. 395) Syria and Palestine formed part of the Byzantine (or Greek) Empire, from which they were wrested by the Saracens in 634-636. In the second half of the eleventh century the Seljuks made themselves masters of these regions. In 1099 the Crusaders established the kingdom of Jerusalem which was overthrown in 1187 by Saladin sultan of Egypt and Syria. In 1291 the Christians lost Acre, their last stronghold in the Holy Land. In 1516 the Ottoman Turks established their dominion over Syria and Palestine. The southwestern part of Palestine constitutes the wilayah of Jerusalem. The rest of the country is included in the vilayets of Beirut and Syria.

Palmyra (a translation of the Semitic Tadmor city of palm) an ancient city in an oasis of the Syrian Desert 120 miles NE of Damascus. It was an important centre of commerce when the Romans first extended their operations to this region in the first century A. D. After having occupied the position of a Roman municipium it became prominent in the third century A. D. as the seat of a princely polity which under Queen Zenobia, attained to great power and splendour. It was an ephemeral realm, overthrown by the Roman emperor Aurelian in A. D. 273. The Romans destroyed the city which was afterwards rebuilt and in the eighth century suffered destruction at the hands of the Saracens. It reappears and is mentioned as having been pillaged by Timur. The ruins which cover a large area attest the magnificence of the ancient city. The principal remains are those of the temple of Baal, which had 500 columns. The Palmyrenes spoke an Aramaean dialect. Greek culture distinguished the realm of Zenobia.

Panama, pa-nam-a, a republic of America, constituted in Nov. 1903, and coextensive with the former department of the same name of the republic of Colombia, and virtually with the isthmus of Panama. It lies between lat. 7° 15' and 9° N. and lon. 77° 15' and 82° 30' W. It has the Caribbean Sea on the N. and the Pacific Ocean on the S. On the W. it is bounded by Central America (republic of Costa Rica). Extreme length about 330 miles width 120 miles, reduced in its narrowest part to somewhat over 40 miles. Area, about 31,600 sq. m. The region is of a mountainous character with a line of heights the Sierra de Panama thought at one time to be the true prolongation of the Andes, running axially through it and attaining a maximum elevation probably not exceeding 3000 feet. A low saddle of only about 300 ft. absolute elevation marks the passage of the transisthmian railway and the position of the contemplated traverse of the Panama Canal. In the western half of the isthmus two prominent mountain series (or chains) are recognized—the Cordillera of Veragua and the Sierra de Chiriquí—which carry a number of volcanic cones and rise to majestic elevations (volcano of Chiriquí 11,970 ft. dome of Santiago 9275 ft.). The rock formation is largely of a sedimentary character, containing in places marine fossils of as late a period as the Miocene, and there are no recent or dormant volcanoes except in the extreme W. (Chiriquí). A very considerable portion of the region is densely grown with a rank and luxuriant forest, in which much valuable timber (mahogany etc.) is found. There is a fair amount of good arable and grazing land and many of the more valuable tropical (or warm temperate) products—such as bananas, cacao, indigo, tobacco, sugar cane, vanilla, etc.—are under cultivation or grow in abundance. The rivers of Panama are of considerable length but they are not ordinarily navigable beyond their estuaries, and in times of flood are raging torrents. The best known of these are the Chagres, discharging on the N. coast near Colón, and the Bayano, a tributary of the Pacific Ocean. Little is as yet known of the mineral resources of the country nothing being done in the way of mining. The climate is markedly tropical with a dry season covering the months January-April and a wet season for most of the balance of the year. The mean annual temperature is about 80° with a maximum of about 100° and 60°. The hottest months are generally December-March. Bains are much more copious on the Caribbean (Atlantic) than on the Pacific side, and the quantity also greatly exceeds that which falls over the interior. In the town of Panama the average annual precipitation is about 66 inches, at Colón, about 125-130 inches and at Gamboa, about 92 inches. Fevers are prevalent in certain regions but the climate generally is not so unhealthy as has been ordinarily assumed. There are practically no roads in the interior. The chief avenue of communication is the interoceanic rail way 49 miles long which was opened in 1855 uniting Colón with Panama, and along which direct transit is afforded merchandise and passengers shipped on the route of two coasts.—The Panama Canal (a lock-canal) over which the United States is to exercise control as projected, will have a length between the shore-lines of 44 miles and between the 6-fathom curves, of 49 miles 13 of which will be through the artificial Lake Bohío. It is to have a minimum depth of water of 35 ft. The chief engineering works in this construction will be the great dam of Bohío and the Culabra cut, through the high ground of the continental divide, measuring approximately 7 miles in length and having a depth of 250 ft. or more.—The population of Panama is about 230,000 the larger portion of which is constituted by people of Spanish descent. There are a large number of Jamaican and other negroes and a few Chinese. The capital of the republic is Panama. The chief of the administration is a governor. The first European to cross the isthmus was Vasco Núñez de Balboa, governor of Darien who in 1513, at the head of a party of which Francisco Pizarro was one, set out on an exploring expedition and from the top of a hill obtained the first view of the Pacific Ocean.

PANAMA, the capital of the republic of Panama, is situated on the bay of the same name on the S. coast of the isthmus of Panama. Lat. 8° 37' 13" N. lon. 79° 31' 58" W. Its more important part stands on a peninsular tongue of land across which its streets extend from shore to shore. Pop. about 30,000. It is a bishop's see and has a handsome cathedral, charity and other hospitals, and a normal and several primary schools sustained by government. The city is a free port, with the anchorage for large vessels about 11 miles distant. The harbor is protected by numerous inlets and affords secure anchorage. The city has but little trade and, having no system of servicable drainage, suffers from malarial and yellow fever. The mean annual temperature is about 82° with maximum and minimum temperatures of 100° and 60°. The annual rainfall varies from about 45 in 85 inches. Panama is the Pacific terminus of the Panama railway which connects this place with Colón, on the Atlantic side of the isthmus. See PANAMA (republic).

Papua, pá-pú-a, or more properly pá-pón-a, or New Guinea, an extensive island of the Eastern Archipelago, lying N. of Australia, from which it is separated by Torres Strait, and comprised roundly between the equator and lat. 11° S. and lon. 131° E. and 151° E. Its area, inclusive of numerous adjacent or neighboring islands, is approximately 300,000 sq. m. thus considerably exceeding that of Borneo. The length from NW to SE is about 1500 miles but the breadth is very unequal. The major indentations of the coast are occupied by Papua Gulf in the SE, the Arafura Sea in the SW and Geelvink Bay in the NW. The interior is still very imperfectly known but it is largely mountainous, with possibly a nearly continuous lofty mountain axis occupying the greater part of the land. Parts of the range or series of ranges are known as the Owen Stanley Range (with Mount Victoria, 13,181 feet) the Albert Mountains, Albert Victor Mountains and the Sir Arthur Gordon (or Masgrave) Range all in British New Guinea (which see). More or less parallel with these are the more northerly Bismarck Mountains of German New Guinea, or Kaiser Wilhelm's Land (which see) with a central summit, perhaps exceeding Mount Victoria in height. N. of the N.E. coast is bounded by mountains which rise from 4000 to 10,000 ft. (Glendstone or Kant Mountains). The largest and most important river is the Fly, which empties into Papua Gulf and is navigable for small steamboats for 500 miles. The Kauerin Augusta River in the N.E. has been ascended by ocean steamers for 100 miles. The climate is hot and unhealthy in the lowlands but quite salubrious and agreeable at elevations of 3000-4000 ft. At Port Moresby the extreme range at 8 a. m. has been found to be between 74° and 84°. Ice frequently forms on the loftier elevations but the mountains are not distinctly snow-capped. The rainfall varies (in different parts) between about 30 and 150 inches. Most of the interior is densely and magnificently forested with banyan- and rubber-trees, tree-ferns, evergreen-oaks, and cypresses, and there is a wealth of orchidaceous plants. The fauna is of the Australian type, with the macropods (tree-kangaroo wallaby etc.) and rodents representing the dominant mammalian forms. Among the birds the numerous various pigeons and members of the parrot tribe, and particularly the varied species of bird-of-paradise, require special mention. The opidians are largely of venomous types. The mineral wealth of the land is still but little known but the indications are that gold and some other precious metals and minerals (copper, etc.) are abundantly distributed. Most of the commoner tropical fruits would find here a congenial home. The sugar-cane (said to be indigenous) coffee, vanilla, tobacco, sago, etc. are cultivated. There are practically no roads in the interior although numerous trails have been cut, more particularly in the English section of the island. The natives, who seem to have been very ancient settlers in the island are generally classed as Papuan negroes, partially of Malayan blood whose affinities are with the Polynesian or with the inhabitants of the islands to the E. The mountain Papuans, frequently designated Alfurus, are measurably distinct from the coast-dwellers, many of whom are of a pronouncedly savage disposition. The inhabitants about the river waters construct pile-dwellings. Politically Papua is divided into British New Guinea, Kaiser Wilhelm's Land and Dutch New Guinea (see New Guinea, Dutch) the last having an area of about one-half of that of the entire island. The total population is estimated at about 750,000.

Paraguay, pá-rá-gwá or pá-rá-gwí, a large river of South America, and one of the principal streams uniting to form the Plata runs by numerous head-streams in the Brazilian state of Mato Grosso near the sources of the Guaporé, Tapejé, and Xingú tributaries of the Amazon on lat. 14° S. lon. 56° to 58° W. It thence flows S. (partly along the Bolivian frontier) mostly through Paraguay between which country and the Argentine Republic it forms a portion of the boundary near Corrientes, lat. 27° 20' S. it unites with the Paraná, the combined stream being generally known as the Paraná. In the lower part of its course it receives the waters of the Pilcomayo and Vermejo from the W. The chief eastern tributaries are the São Lourenço, Taquary, Mondego, and Teichowary. Length about 1500 miles throughout nearly all of which to the influx of the Jaurú (lat. 16° 30' S.) it is navigable. River steamers ascend to the influx of the São Lourenço. Between lat. 17° and 19° S. it traverses a wide region of swamps which during the rains form a great inland sea (Laguna de los Charques). Steamboats of the densest class make regular communication between Asunción and Buenos Aires.

Paraguay, a name at one time applied to the whole of the immense region of South America between lat. 15° S. and the Strait of Magellan and between Chile and Peru on the W. and Brazil on the E. but now confined to one of the smallest of the Spanish-American republics.

Paraguay, an island republic of South America, the lesser portion of which, or that known as Paraguay proper (Paraguay Oriental) is included between lat. 23° 4' and 37° 35' S. and lon. 54° 32' and 58° 40' W. To this is now added that portion of the Gran Chaco extending N. to lat. 31° 30' S., which lies E. of the Pilcomayo and was formerly a part of the Argentine Republic. With this broader extent of the republic, the Pilcomayo and Paraguay rivers separate it on the W. from the Argentine Republic, and the Paraná forms part of the boundary on the E. between Paraguay and Brazil and the whole of the boundary on the SE. and S. between Paraguay and the Argentine Republic. On the N. it has Bolivia and the Brazilian state of Mato Grosso. The space thus enclosed forms a compact territory having an area of about 93,000 sq. m.

A low range of elevations, the Sierra Amambahi extends N. and S. along the northern part of the Brazilian frontier, dividing southwestward into the serras of Cas Guand and Villa Rica and eastward, at about lat. 24° S. into the Sierra de Mbaracayú the latter takes an easterly course, and its passage across the Paraná forms the famous fall of Guayra (or Sete Quedas). None of these ranges exceeds 1400 feet in elevation. The S. part of the country is low and swampy eminently fit for rice-culture. (For the characteristics of the Gran Chaco region, see GRAN CHACO.) The streams by which the drainage is effected, though exceedingly numerous, have comparatively short courses. By far the largest is the Yaburay. The Paraguay River which forms the western boundary of the republic for about 150 miles below the mouth of the Pilcomayo, rises in Brazil and traverses the rich state of Mato Grosso. From the influx of the Jaurú in lat. 16° to the mouth of the Plata, a distance of 10 degrees of latitude, there is not a rapid to impede navigation.

The climate, though for the most part tropical, has its excessive heat greatly modified by the inequalities of the surface. In July and August frosts occasionally occur. The rainfall is moderate, averaging for the region at large 40-50 inches. The whole country is remarkable for its fertility. The soil is of great fertility and the vegetation almost unrivalled in its luxuriance. In the forests are many kinds of trees furnishing timber, dye-woods, gums, drugs, perfumes, oils, fruits, etc. A principal product is the yerba mate (Ilex Paraguariensis) or Paraguay tea, an evergreen the leaf of which is nearly as much a stimulant as in South America as the Chinese tea is in the United States. This quantity of the leaf exported in 1903 was 8958 tons, valued at $789,845. The objects of agriculture include the greater part of the most valuable products both of the tropical and temperate zones. On all the alluvial tracts where cultivation is attempted, sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco of superior quality, rice, maize, and culinary vegetables yield a rich return. The large plains feed immense herds of cattle which are slaughtered chiefly for their tallow, hides, bones and horns. The fauna of the country is very varied and includes numerous monkeys, the jaguar, puma, tapir, peccary, deer, etc. and a vast assortment of birds of brilliant plumage, the wild turkey and rhe (or American ostrich).

The trade of Paraguay consists in the export of its tea, fruits, tobacco, sugar, gashucho extract (used in tanning), cotton, rubber, hides, tallow, wax, honey, cattle, horses, mules, wool, leather, etc. In 1903 upward of 105,000,000 oranges were exported, the hides exported during the same year were 271,750 in number. The number of horned cattle in the republic in 1900 was 2,743,808. Its commerce was long greatly retarded by the policy of the government of Buenos Aires (Argentine Republic) which taking undue advantage of its command of the mouth of the Plata the outlet to the Paraguay and Paraná, rigorously excluded all intercourse between the countries tributary to these streams and other nations. In 1903 the entire in the port of Asunción were 28:1 steamers and 781 sailing vessels. There is a line of railway connecting Asunción with Pirapó over a length of 156 miles.

Government Population History—The executive power is vested in a president who is elected for a term of 4 years and exercises his functions with the assistance of a cabinet of 5 ministers. The legislative authority is vested in a congress of two houses, a senate and a house of deputies chosen by universal suffrage the election being direct in the case of both. The Roman Catholic Church is the established church but all religions are tolerated. The capital is Asunción. There are a national college and an agricultural school at the capital. The bulk of the inhabitants are of mixed Spanish and Indian blood (Mestizos). Of the aboriginal tribes the Guaraní, who inhabit the Gran Chaco and many of whom are civilized, are the most numerous. The region of the Paraná and Paraguay rivers was first explored by Sebastian Cabot (in the corvée of Charles V.) in 1527-28. Spanish colonization soon followed. Asunción was founded about 1536. Early in the seventeenth century began the remarkable period of Jesuit domination. By exercising gentleness and policy the Jesuits succeeded in bringing the Indians under the restraints of civilized life. They established a flourishing theocratic commonwealth, whose bounds extended far beyond the limits of the present Paraguay. In 1763 the Jesuits were expelled from Spanish America. In 1776 Paraguay was attached to the vice-royalty of La Plata. The authority of Spain was thrown off in 1811. A war waged against Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and Uruguay in 1863-70 brought ruin upon the republic, which has been slowly recovering from its effects. Pop. in 1900 830,571, including 100,000 Indians.

in some of the head-waters coming from the Serra da Mantiqueira less than 60 miles from the Atlantic Ocean. It flows in a general SW direction, bounding the republic of Paraguay on the E and S and separating it from Brazil and the Argentine Republic. Just before leaving Brazilian territory the river is precipitated over the celebrated fall of Guayrá (or Sete Quedas) below which it passes over a long series of rapids. Near Corrientes in lat. $27^{\circ} 25' S$ it joins the Paraguay and confers its own name on the united stream. Thence its course is southward to within 80 miles of Buenos Aires, where it unites with the Uruguay River to form the estuary of the Plata. Its total course is variously estimated at from 2100 to 2800 miles. In its upper part it receives numerous large affluents, as the Paro, Paranahyba, Itatá, Parapanema, Ivaty and Iguaçu but, owing to falls, the river is continuously navigable from the Plata only to the island of Appa, 160 miles above its junction with the Paraguay. Below this point, where the width of the stream expands in some places to 2-3 miles, it is navigable for vessels of 300 tons. Below the junction with the Paraguay it receives one large affluent, the Rio Salado from the W. In the Argentine Republic, Rosario Paraná Santa Fé (see o sudoeste) Corrientes Candelaria, and other important towns are on its banks. Vessels drawing 10 feet ascend in high water to Rosario.

Paris (Fr. pron pá-ree) ana. Latetia, or Latetia Parisiorum afterwards Parisii) the capital of France and of the department of Seine, the centre of the artistic, scientific, and commercial life of the French nation, and after London and New York the most populous city of the world, is situated on both banks of the Seine, just below the confluence of the Marne, about 21 miles in a direct line SSE. of London Lat. of the Observatoire de Paris

42° 36' 11" N. lon 2° 20' 15" E. The city, which occupies an area of about 20 000 acres (of which 12,000 are built over) lies generally at an altitude of 120-200 feet above the sea, rising in the heights of Montmartre to 420 feet. The river Seine which traverses it in a semicircular curve, with its convexity towards the S, has with the city a length of 7 miles and is crossed by 21 substantial bridges, some of them with beautiful structural effects. It forms two islands in the centre of the city so close to each other as almost to constitute a single island—the Ile de la Cité and the Ile St. Louis, the former representing the most ancient part of Paris. This was the site of the ancient Lutetia, the chief place of the tribe of the Parisii.

In a general way Paris may be divided into three sections: the old city (or central Paris) lying within the line of the main boulevards (Grande Rue nouvelle—Madeleine, Châteaux, Palais, Meisette, Polissomire, St Denis, St Martin etc.) the older suburbs (or faubourgs), lying immediately outside of the great boulevards; and the out-lying districts, still within the line of fortifications, which have been incorporated with the city since 1860. The principal among these are Anteuil Bercy Belleville, Charonne, Ménilmontant, La Chapelle, La Villette Granelle Auplard, Les Batignolles Montmartre, and Passy. The fortifications of Paris which render the city well nigh impregnable, consist of an exterior (so longer enclosing the whole city) and of an inner and outer line of forts and fortresses. The forts of the inner line (Trivy Mary Montrouge, Valerien etc.) were in a great measure destroyed in the war of 1870-1 but have since been rebuilt. Paris is divided into 20 arrondissements each of which is governed by a mayor and 2 councilmen the administration of the entire city being under the pretext of the Senate, appointed by the government, and a town council elected by the citizens.

Paris presents a generally uniform appearance, its buildings especially those of the new quarters being constructed on harmonious relation with one another. The avenues or boulevards that circumferentially and radially traverse the city are of great width superbly maintained and admirably adapted to relieve the congestion that would be imposed upon minor streets by the great traffic of the city. Those of the inner town contain the finest retail shops and hotels, and are lined with restaurants and cafés, and constitute the centre of the fashionable and bohemian life of ant-doo Paris. The most famous line of streets is the Rue de Rivoli with its somewhat irregular continuation in the magnificent Champs Elysees and the Avenue de la Grande Armée on one side, and the Rue St. Antoine on the other which traverse a great part of the city from SE to NW. The Champs Elysees, a driveway about 1½ miles in length, and the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne constitute the most fashionable promenade of the city. Among other remarkable streets may be mentioned the Rue de la Paix Boulevard St. Germain, Avenue de l'Opéra, Rue St. Honoré, Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré, Boulevard Haussmann Boulevard Sébastopol Boulevard St. Michel Rue St. Denis, and the Rue Lafayette. Among the distinctive quarters of the city are the Quarter St. Germain and Quarter Latin on the S side of the Seine, adjoining each other the former noted as the seat of erudition and the abode of ambassadors, and the latter as the home of students and artists. Paris is distinguished for the number of its open squares (places) and gardens, nearly all of which are embellished with monumental sculptures or palaces. Among these are the Palace de la Concorde, one of the finest city squares in the world measuring nearly 1200 feet in length and 600 ft. in width with an Egyptian obelisk brought from Luxor in its centre, the Place de la Bastille, on the site of the famous prison of the Bastille, torn down by the people in 1789 and containing the Column of July erected to the memory of those who fell in the revolution of July 1830, the Place Vendôme, containing the Colonne Vendôme erected in imitation of Trajan's column at Rome by Napoleon I to commemorate his victories over the Austrians and Russians in 1805, the Place de l'Etoile, containing the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile, the largest triumphal arch in existence, 142 ft. in height and 147 ft. in width, with a passage-way 86 ft. high (began by Napoleon I in 1806 and completed by Louis Philippe in 1836) the Place des Carroussel between the Gardens of the Tuilleries and the Louvre, with a beautiful triumphal arch erected by Napoleon I the Place de la République, embellished with a statue of the Republic; and the Place de la Nation Place d'Hotel de Ville, Place de l'Opéra, and Place du Trône-Chaud. In the western part of the city on the S bank of the Seine, is the large open space called the Champs de Mars, long famous as a place for military manoeuvres and in recent times utilized for international exhibitions. Here stands the Eiffel Tower 964 ft. in height, by far the loftiest structure ever erected. The famous gardens in the eastern of the city are those lining the Champs Élysées and the Gardens of the Tuilleries, on the N side of the Seine, and the Luxembourg Gardens and the Jardin des Plantes (containing a botanical garden, menagerie, and museum of natural history) on the S side of the Seine. More removed are the Parc Monceaux in the NW, and the Parc des Buttes Chaumont in the NE. The two famous parks, the Bois de Boulogne (covering 2350 acres) and the Bois de Vincennes (covering 2275 acres) lie outside of the city limits, respectively in the W and SE. A section of the Bois de Boulogne has been set off as the Jardin d'Acclimatation, a world famous establishment for the acclimatization of plants and animals. The quays along the Seine constitute one of the most attractive features of Paris. Among the most famous bridges are the Pont Neuf, Pont de Notre Dame, Pont de la Concorde, Pont d'Austerlitz, Pont d'Ina, and the new and magnificent Pont Alexandre III.

Paris surpasses all cities of the Continent in its scientific, literary, educational, and benevolent institutions and in the number of buildings of world renown. Among the latter are the Louvre, the most important public building in the city, a palace of vast extent dating back to the middle of the sixteenth century and completed in the middle of the nineteenth which contains the most valuable collections of art N of the Alps, besides a most important collection of Egyptian and Oriental antiquities; the Palais Royal, N of the Louvre; the Hôtel de Ville (or city hall) erected in 1876-84 and replacing its historic predecessor which was burned in 1871; the Panthéon, a temple dedicated to the memory of illustrious Frenchmen occupying the site of the tomb of the patron saint of Paris St. Étienne, and presenting in its lofty dome one of the most striking architectural elements in the city; the Hôtel des Invalides, a vast home for veteran soldiers, under the great dome of which is the tomb of Napoleon I; the Palais de Justice, with the Sainte Chapelle, occupying the site of the ancient palace of the kings of France; the cathedral of Notre Dame, founded in 1163, a noble specimen of early Gothic architecture, whose twin towers soar aloft on the Île de la Cité; the churches of St. Sulpice, La Trinité, and St. Germain l'Auxerrois; the Madeleine (or church of St. Mary Magdalen) in the form of a Greek temple, erected between 1764 and 1843; the national library, whose collections rank with the library of the British Museum, containing upward of 3,000,000 volumes; the Grand Opéra, a sumptuous edifice covering nearly three acres and erected at a cost of about $7,500,000 but having accommodation for only 2,200 persons; the Bourse, the palace of the chamber of deputies; the palace of the Institut de France comprising the five famous academies known as the French Academy, the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres, the Academy of Sciences, the Academy of Fine Arts, and the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences; the palace of the Lycée, the residence of the president of the republic; the palace of the Trocadéro, a huge building in Oriental style, built in connection with the World's Exhibition of 1878 and now containing an ethnological museum and collections of sculpture and the palace and museum of the Luxembourg, the former the seat of the French senate and the latter containing a collection of the works of contemporary artists. The royal (formerly imperial) palace of the Tuilleries, burned by the Communists in 1871, is represented only by the wings which formerly connected it with the Louvre. Prominent among the public monuments of old Paris are the Port St. Martin and the Port St. Denis, beautiful triumphal arches erected by Louis XIV.

Among the higher educational institutions of Paris are the University of Paris (including the Sorbonne, for the faculties of literature and science) with about 13,000 students, including nearly 400 women; the Collège de France; Musée d'Histoire Naturelle; Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers (applied sciences); École Normale Supérieure; École des Ponts et Chaussées (for civil engineers); École des Beaux Arts, founded in 1643 one of the most famous schools of painting, sculpture, engraving, and architecture in the world; the École de Médecine; École Polytechnique; and the Conservatoire de Musique et Déclamation. Among the numerous charitable and benevolent institutions are the hospital of the Salpêtrière, an asylum for aged and insane women, containing 3,800 beds; and the Hôtel Dieu, erected at a cost of $9,000,000 one of the twenty hospitals of the Assistance Publique, which discharges annually about 30,000 men, 40,000 women, and 30,000 children. Among other edifices and institutions mention should be made of the new palace of the fine arts erected in 1897-1899; the Cluny Museum with a vast collection of medieval objects of art and industrial products; the observatory; the Gobelins, the state manufactory of the Gobelins tapestry and the Hautes Coutures (or central market) the buildings of which cover 22 acres. The famous theatres besides the Opéra are the Théâtre Français (or Comédie Française), the Opéra Comique, Odéon, and Gymnase.

Paris is supplied with an elaborate system of surface railroads and omnibuses and with an underground electric railway begun in 1898 and opened for traffic in 1900. Numerous little steamboats ply on the Seine. The city is underlain by a vast network of sewers (égouts) noted for their great dimensions. The most famous cemeteries are those of Père La Chaise, Montmartre, and Montparnasse. The celebrated Catacombs of Paris, of vast extent, were originally quarries. Some of the railway stations are on a grand scale.

The industrial establishments of Paris embrace all kinds of manufactures, but their products belong especially to the class distinguished as objects of taste and fashion, such as furniture, jewelry, trinkets, bronzes, porcelain, mirrors, clocks and watches, perfumery, bonnets, gloves, dresses, and carriages. The city is celebrated for its mathematical and optical instruments and it is one of the chief centres in Europe for the production of works connected with the fine arts. The book-publishing business of France is carried on almost exclusively in Paris. The yearly industrial production of the city is valued at about 34 milliards of francs, being about one-quarter of that of the whole of France.

Among the most noted of the near suburbs of Paris may be mentioned Neuilly, Boulogne Saint-Germain, and Saint-Germain-en-Laye in the W; Sèvres, Moulin, and Ver-sailles in the SW; Saint-Denis in the N; Vincennes in the E; Charonne in the SE; and Montreuil in the S. Nearly 40 miles to the SE, in Fontainebleau, with its magnificent forest.

Paris was a place of some importance in the time of Cæsar, it was then confined to the island in the Seine now called the Île de la Cité and was the chief town of the Gallie tribe of the Parisii. It rose into prominence under the Roman emperors. Clovis fixed his capital here in 508. From about the close of the tenth century Paris was the permanent capital of France. Philip Augustus (1180-1223) constructed a great wall the circuit of the fortifications at that time being nearly 4 miles. The establishment of the university which as an organized institution appears as early as the beginning of the thirteenth century and which drew thousands of students from all parts of Europe, added greatly to its importance. At the beginning of the fourteenth century the inhabitants appear to have numbered between 150,000 and 200,000. Paris was delivered up to the English in 1420 and held by them for 16 years. The erection of the Louvre and the Tuilleries was begun in the sixteenth century. Under Louis XIV (1643-1715) the city underwent a great transformation being beautified in many ways, and it now began to assume the position of the social metropolis of Europe. Just before the revolution of 1789 an octroi (customs) wall was built, having a circuit of about 15 miles, which existed down to the time of Napoleon III. The first revolution began July 14, 1789, the second took place in July 1830 and the third in Feb. 1848. Louis Philippe (1830-48) surrounded Paris with a vast wall and a great ring of forts. Under Napoleon III the city was greatly modernized and embellished. Since the establishment of the republic a system of improvements has been inaugurated scarcely inferior to those of the second empire. Among the chief military events in the history of Paris in modern times are the siege by Henry IV, who took the city in 1594; the entry of the Allees in 1814 and 1815; the siege and capture of the city by the Germans in 1870-71 and the war of the Commune in 1871 when the city was besieged by the forces of the national government and taken after the destruction by the Communists of the Tuilleries and other edifices. Memorable treaties of peace were concluded at Paris in 1763 (closing the Seven Years War), 1785 (War of the American Revolution), 1814 and 1815 (Napoleonic wars), 1856 (Crimean War) and 1898 (Spanish-American War). The population of Paris in 1713 was 569,000; in 1851 it was 1,043,000; in 1881 2,260,023; in 1891 2,447,987; in 1901 2,714,046. The population is more dense than that of any other large city of Europe. The closely appressed and built-up suburbs if added to the city proper, would raise the population to above 3,000,000. The mean annual temperature is 51.5° mean temperature of winter 37.8°, of summer 64.5°. Mean annual rainfall, 35 inches.

Parma, Decur or one of the states into which Italy was divided previous to 1860. It dated from 1545. Associated with the duchy of Parma from the beginning was the duchy of Piacenza, the two forming one state, later known simply as Parma. The House of Farnese ruled down to 1731. Then Parma and Piacenza passed to Don Carlos, son of Philip V of Spain (House of Bourbon) by whom they were ceded to Austria in 1735. In 1748 Austria made them over together with the duchy of Guastalla, to Don Philip, brother of Don Carlos. In 1802 Bonaparte took possession of them. The Congress of Vienna (1814-15) created the ex-empress, Maria Louisa, duchess of Parma. On her death in 1847 the duchy reverted to the former Spanish (Bourbon) dynasty. In 1860 Parma was annexed to the dominions of Victor Emmanuel. The state had an area of about 2750 sq. m. and the population in 1860 slightly exceeded 500,000. Its territories constitute the present provinces of Parma and Piacenza.

Patagonia, pá'ta-gó-ne-á, an extensive region comprising the S. extremity of South America, from about lat. 38° S. to the Strait of Magellan. Its possession was long in dispute between the Argentine Republic and Chile, but by treaty of 1881 the latter recognized the right of the former to the country east of the crest of the eastern ridge of the Andes (or the water-parting between the Atlantic and Pacific systems) comprising most of old Patagonia and including the eastern coast of Tierra del Fuego. The W. coast is greatly indented and bordered by the Andes, which here rise generally to between 3000 and 6000 feet, presenting in part forested slopes and a much glaciated region. The surface E. of the Andes is largely in the form of an elevated plateau, capped in great part by sheets of basalt, and falling in terraces to the sea. It extends over several hundred miles, and is composed mainly of Cretaceous, Tertiary, and Post-Tertiary sandstones, with marine shells, clay earth and gravel, grass and bush grown in part, but elsewhere arid and sterile. There are numerous lakes, many of which appear to be of glacial origin. The chief streams are the Colorado, Rio Negro, Chubut, Santa Cruz, Chilo, and Gallegos, most of which are interrupted by rapids. The climate is mostly exceedingly raw, and violent winds prevail. Guanoes, viscachas (found in great numbers), punas, foxes, and skunks are the principal quadrupeds. The condor, hawk, vulture, and American ostrich are among the more distinctive birds. The region has yielded on exceedingly rich Tertiary and Post-Tertiary mammalian fauna, with marked Australian and African affinities. The Indians who are thinly scattered over this region are remarkable for their lofty stature, they lead a wandering life, and subsist principally on the flesh of wild quadrupeds, mushrooms, and fish. Patagonia was discovered by Magellan in 1520. He is said to have given the name Patagonia to the inhabitants from the circumstance that their feet, encased in the skins of animals, appeared like paws (Port. pata).

Peking, or Peking, (pi-kin, the northern capital) the capital of China, in the province of Chi li, situated in a sandy plain between the Pei ho and its affluent the Hun ho, 100 miles NW of the mouth of the former river in the Yellow Sea, at the head of the Grand Canal, and 55 miles S of the Great Wall of China. Lat. of imperial observatory $39^{\circ} 54' 13'' N$, lon. $116^{\circ} 28' 54'' E$. The city is connected by railway with Tien tsin (50 miles) and with Mukden and thus has rail communication with Europe through the Transiberian line. The population has been estimated at 1,600,000-2,000,000 but seemingly it does not much exceed 500,000. Peking consists of two contiguous cities, each separately enclosed by lofty walls, which together are entered by 16 gates. The entire circuit is reckoned at 26 miles. The walls of the Manch'ia city which contains the imperial and forbidden sacred quarters are 43 feet high, those of the Chinese city are 30 ft high and 35 ft thick at the base, diminishing to 13 ft. at the top. There are square towers at intervals of about 60 yards, and the whole is surrounded by a ditch. The streets run mainly at right angles to one another N and S, E and W and at their intersections there are frequently large arches. The southern or Chinese city is the seat of commerce and the residence of probably the majority of the population, abounding in shops of all descriptions and continually filled with a motley crowd. There are few edifices in this quarter deserving notice. The houses are of brick with red tiled roofs, and the city is unpaved and unadorned. The northern Tartar Manchu, or imperial city consists of three separate enclosures. The center of these, formerly appropriated to the Tartar garrison, is now mostly occupied by Chinese traders. The second enclosure (Hwang-ching, the august city or imperial city proper) is entered by 4 large and several smaller gates. In it are extensive public granaries, a military arsenal and armory, an astronomical and a magnetic observatory (from which the instruments were in greater part removed to Germany in 1900), the great temples of Ancestors and of Peace, the imperial university of China, the residences of the great dignitaries of the empire, the vast examination halls, the halls of the eunuchs, imperial bridges, bell-tower, the temple of the white pagoda, and a large lake. The inner enclosure (or forbidden city) surrounded by a moat lined with masonry is appropriated to the public and private palaces of the emperor and empress, and has pavilions, gardens and an artificial mountain. Outside of both cities are open suburbs, bustling with mercantile activity. Peking has edifices appropriated to many forms of religion. Among these are a Greek church and convent, Roman Catholic chapel, Mohammedan mosques, Buddhist temples, and temples dedicated to Confucius and other dated mortals. The imperial university (formerly the national college, Han-lin-yuen) is the great seat of Chinese learning and literature. Among the other learned and scientific institutions of note are the medical college and the astronomical board. Peking has a mint since 1890. Electrical works were introduced in 1900. Among the more recent structures is the Kettler memorial arch dedicated in Jan., 1903. About 16 miles WNW of the city are the remains of a vast imperial park, containing numerous palaces of the emperor and great officers of the state, many of which were demolished by the allies in 1800. Peking has a large printing and bookselling trade and manufactures of colored glass, idols, and other articles. The Pei ho is navigable for boats to within a short distance of Peking, and communicates with the Grand Canal by which most of the provisions for the supply of the city are conveyed. Peking is regarded by the Chinese as one of their most ancient cities but it was not made the capital of the country until its conquest by the Mongols in the latter part of the thirteenth century. It was occupied by the British and French in 1900. Following upon the Boxer movement of 1900 and the siege of the foreign legations, the city was entered by the troops of the allied nations of Europe and America in August of the same year and held by them until the treaty of Peking in Sept. 1901.

The volcano had previously been in eruption in 1763 and 1861. Altitude of the culminating point (which was the Morne de la Croix) prior to the eruptions of 1902, 4300 (4400?) feet, increased to 4200 ft. in 1902 by the extrusion through the central dome on the SW side of the mountain of an immense rock core somewhat over 1000 ft. in height and about 500 ft. in greatest diameter at the base. Area of the land-surface, 44,986 sq. m. of the overlying waters, 230 sq. m. Maximum length, E and W 305 miles breadth 163 miles.

The face of the country is exceedingly varied. A most conspicuous feature is presented by the parallel ranges of mountains belonging to the Appalachian system and having a quite uniform direction from NE to SW. The principal ridges or chains of this system beginning on the eastern side, are the Blue Ridge (or South Mountain) conforming tectonically to the Highlands of the Hudson the Blue (North or Kittatinny) Mountain which extends from the Delaware Water Gap to the Maryland boundary a few miles S of Mercersburg and the various ridges lying westward, which constitute the main mass of the Alleghenies and represent the identical orographic features of the states lying to the south. The inner ridges in the W N and NE develop into a nearly flat-topped plateau-surface, the Alleghany Plateau, which in places breaks off in a bold escarpment towards the east and continues northward into the plateau of south-central New York. The most prominent individualized feature of this plateau (which with a general elevation of 1000-2000 feet, occupies the major part of the western section of the state) is the Pocono Mountain in the NE section of the state, which represents in part the eroded plateau of the Catskill Mountains. The Blue (or Kittatinny) Mountain which in a number of marked depressions or gaps permits of the passage through it of the Delaware Lehigh Schuylkill, Swatara, and Susquehanna rivers, is the correspondent of the Shawangunk Mountains of New York and attains elevations perhaps nowhere much exceeding 2400 ft. Prominent summits are Mount Minsi (about 1500 ft.) and Tammany the latter in New Jersey which guard the passage of the Delaware River through the picturesque Delaware Water Gap. The names of subordinate mountain-groups or sections are Manch Chunk Sharp, Locust, Buck, Mahanoy, Shamokin, Catwallow, Bear, Beaver Meadow, Newcock, Tuscarora, and the more westerly Sliding Broad Top, Bald Eagle, Brush, Dunning's, Main Alleghany Laurel (the most westerly of the prominent ridges) and Savage mountains. The Shawnee, Shickelminny and Wyoming mountains enclose the Leokwanna coal field. Most of the ranges between the Sharp and the Wyoming mountains lie in or traverse the anthracite region NW of Philadelphia. In the Alleghany Mountains we encounter a complex succession of remarkably uniform, low narrow and level-topped, chiefly sandstone, mountains or ridges separated by narrow valleys, floored with limestone and shales, and crossing the whole state. While the loftiest summit has perhaps not yet been determined, it appears that no elevation much exceeds 3000 ft., and it is doubtful if even this altitude is anywhere attained. There is no marked dominating mountain-peak. A large portion of the state is still forest-land, but the exceedingly fertile valleys, such as the Cumberland Valley (between the South and North mountains) Lebanon Valley Wyoming Valley and the valleys of the Susquehanna and Monongahela, have placed Pennsylvania among the leading agricultural states of the Union. The southeastern triangle of the state, which is traversed by outliers of the Appalachian Mountains, forming the North and South Valley Hills the heights of Chestnut Hill Bryn Mawr etc., is largely an agricultural region and contains the fertile Chester Montgomery and Lancaster valleys.

Rivers etc.—The principal rivers are the Delaware (navigable for large ships to Philadelphia and for smaller steamcraft to Trenton) the chief tributaries, the Lehigh and Schuylkill, both affording slack water navigation, the Susquehanna (formed by the union of the East or North and West Branches) which is adapted to the fishing of rapids and arks and whose banks have been canalized, the Juniata the main tributary of the Susquehanna, the Ohio whose constituent streams are the Allegheny and Monongahela and the Lackawanna, Conemaugh, and Venango tributary streams of secondary importance. The Ohio and its main head-streams afford a great deal of navigation during good stages of water. There are no large lakes in the state and nearly all the bodies of water entitled to this name are glacial lakes and occur in the region of past glaciation. In this section in the NE part of the state, we found a number of highly picturesque waterfalls (Berkhill Dingman's, Ravennockhill Sawkill).

Geology and Minerals.—With the exception of restricted areas in the SE where a belt of Triassic shales and sandstones extends from NE to SW and where in close proximity to the Delaware River there would also appear to be deposits of Cretaceous and Tertiary age, the entire state belongs basically to the Archæan and Paleozoic periods of geological time, the rocks of oldest age (apart from the very ancient South Mountain) lying almost at the extreme SE (Delaware, Philadelphia, and Berks co.). The immediately succeeding valleys are chiefly Silurian. Beyond this all the formations to the Permian we meet with. In mineral wealth Pennsylvania stands in the very first rank among the states, a rank which the occupies chiefly in reason of the abundance, accessibility and practical usefulness of her stores of coal, iron, petroleum and natural gas. The production of coal about equals that mined by all the other states of the Union collectively. The output of anthracite in 1903 was 1,406,668 short tons valued at $152,636,448 of bituminous coal 103,117,178 tons valued at $131,352,769. The quantity of iron ore mined in 1901 was 1,040,684 long tons (largely from the Cornwall-Lebanon magnetite region) but in 1903 the product was only 644,899 tons. In the yield of iron ore Pennsylvania has been far outstripped by Minnesota, Michigan and Alabama, and the iron-furnaces in the state now obtain most of their ore from the Lake Superior mines. The production of crude petroleum in 1903 was 11,355,150 barrels valued at $13,170,881. There has been a marked decrease in production for many years. Other mined or quarried mineral products are serpentine, white marble, siliceous chromite iron nickel zinc ore, galena, and cerussite. The anthracites are found in long narrow basins, disposed mainly in three fields,—the Schuylkill and Mingo Hill field, the Schuylkill Mahanoy and Lehigh basins and the Lackawanna and Wyoming coal field. Beyond what is sometimes known as the Main Allegheny ridge are found the great bituminous coal-fields which cover a very large part of the state. Coal does not occur in the southeastern counties. Most of the petroleum of the state has its source in or is obtained from strata of Devonian age, the counties of Venango, Butler McKean Washington and Clarion furnishing the greater part of the obtained supply. An important associated product is natural gas, which is obtained chiefly in Greene Washington Armstrong and Clarion co. The value of the product in 1903 was $14,352,183—nearly half that of the entire product of the United States. Salt is produced extensively by evaporation from strong brines reached by artesian borings. The northern sections of the state are covered with glacial drift. Pennsylvania has a number of noted mineral springs, among which are those of Bedford, York, Doubting Gap, Ephrata, and Yellow Springs.

Climate.—Pennsylvania enjoys the general climate of the middle temperate regions, has a fairly abundant rainfall, and a temperature ordinarily exhibiting no particularly accentuated extremes of heat or cold. The mean temperature of January at Philadelphia is somewhat over 32° and that of July 76°, with extremes in summer (rare) of 105° and in winter of -6° (or -10°). A much more rigorous cold prevails in the mountain sections where -30° (or even more) is not rare. The average annual rainfall is for the entire state about 44 inches.

Agriculture, Forest Products.—Pennsylvania occupies a very prominent position as an agricultural state, and there is comparatively little land which might not be utilized. The Cumberland, Wyoming, and Lebanon valleys, the beautiful grain-producing and wool-growing counties of the SW, the admirable pastoral soils of the NW, the skillfully managed farms of Lancaster Chester Delaware, Montgomery Berks, Berks, Lehigh and Northampton counties and the limestone soils of most of the mountain-valleys, more than compensate for the acreage of waste lands. Pennsylvania excels in dairy and market-garden products, in wheat, Indian corn oats wool tobacco fruit, potatoes, hay live-stock and indeed in all the agricultural staples of the northern states. In 1900 the production of corn was 32,707,900 bushels valued at $14,718,555 wheat, 20,261,334 bushels, valued at $14,002,566, oats, 36,000,672 bushels, valued at $11,400,263, rye, 4,418,299 bushels, buckwheat, 3,188,402 bushels, potatoes, 10,921,743 bushels, valued at $3,768,526 and hay 2,612,561 tons valued at $3,743,692. The state is a large producer of orchard fruits, and tobacco is a leading crop in York and Lancaster valleys. Pennsylvania ranks as one of the leading states in the lumber trade and furnishes large quantities of white pine, spruce, and hemlock. In the NE there are extensive beech forests. Oak of many species the sugar and other maples, ash, hickory elm tulip-tree, black and white walnut, and many other useful trees abound.

Manufactures etc.—In this department of industry the state holds the second place in the Union being surpassed by New York alone in the annual value of its products. The iron and steel industries, whose principal seats of activity are centered at Pittsburgh Allegheny, Westmoreland McKeesport, Johnstown Harrisburg Reading Scranton etc., outrank the use of any other state. In foundry and machine shop products Pennsylvania takes first position as it likewise does in textile manufactures and the manufacture of carpets. Pittsburgh is also one of the principal glass-making towns in the United States and turns out immense quantities of machinery castings nails hardware etc. Philadelphia as one of the world's great manufacturing centres has a great variety of industries. Its vast ship-building yards and locomotive works give it a unique position among the industrial centres of the western world. Chester is also an important seat of the ship-building industry.

The values of some of the leading industries of the state in 1900 were iron and steel $434,445,200 products of rolling mills and steel works, $392,588,174, textiles $158,783,087 foundry and machine-shop products, $121,292,440 blast-furnace products, $101,675,467 leather $35,615,909 cars (with repairs etc.) $62,326,091 flour and other grist-mill products $76,630,423 liquors $34,520,348 petroleum refining $34,971,766 sugar and molasses refining $36,163,917 clothing $35,083,623 tobacco $33,365,912 glass, $22,011,130 lumber and timber products $35,740,965 saw and planing mill products $16,736,830 boots and shoes $13,253,935 paper and pulp $12,267,900.

The Delaware River affords a channel of commerce deep enough for ships of the largest class and Philadelphia in that river is one of the principal seats in the United States of foreign and coastwise trade. Philadelphia, Erie, and Pittsburgh are ports of entry.

Railroads.—The Switchback railway at Mauch Chunk, opened in 1826 was followed by a number of other coal roads, and in 1834 the Philadelphia and Columbia R. (62 miles) and the Portage R. (36 miles) were opened having been built at the expense of the state. In 1835 there were 266 miles of railroad in the state in 1846 840 miles in 1856 1240 miles in 1860 2598 miles in 1870 4656 miles in 1880 8243 miles, in 1890 8700 miles and in 1900 10,400 miles.

The canals of Pennsylvania, which formerly extended over more than 1000 miles, have been in greater part abandoned in consequence of the introduction of railroads.

Education.—Although Pennsylvania frames of government directed the establishment of public schools and the free education of the children of the poor was subsequently provided for by statute, the public-school system of Philadelphia did not come into operation until 1818, and the first common school law for the state was enacted in 1834. The leading educational institutions of the state are the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, Western University of Pennsylvania, at Allegheny, Lafayette College, at Easton Lehigh University, at South Bethlehem, Dickinson College at Carlisle, Bucknell University at Lewisburg, Haverford College, at Haverford Swarthmore College, at Bwarthmore Bryn Mawr College (for women), at Bryn Mawr La Salle College, at Philadelphia Theological Seminary of St. Charles Borromeo, at Overbrook, Washington and Jefferson College at Washington Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster Lincoln University (for colored) at Lincoln University There are in addition many professional and technical schools of high grade, and numerous normal and high schools and colleges.

Counties—Pennsylvania has 67 counties Adams Allegheny Armstrong Beaver Bedford Berks Blair Bradford Bucks Butler Cambria, Cameron, Carbon Chester Clarion, Clearfield, Clinton, Columbia, Crawford Cumberland Dauphin Delaware, Elk Erie Fayette Forest Franklin Fulton Greene, Huntingdon Indiana, Jefferson Juniata, Lackawanna, Lancaster Lawrence Lebanon Lehigh Luzerne, Lycoming McKees Mercer Mifflin Monroe, Montgomery Montour Northampton Northumberland Perry Philadelphia, Pike, Potter Schuylkill Snyder Somerset, Sullivan Susquehanna Tioga, Union Venango, Warren Washington Wayne, Westmoreland, Wyoming, and York

The principal cities and boroughs are Philadelphia, the largest city in the state and the third in the Union (pop. in 1900 1,293,697) Pittsburgh (521,010) Allegheny adjoining Pittsburgh (129,996) Scranton (103,028) Reading (78,981) Erie (52,777) Wilkesbarre (51,721) Harrisburg, the capital (50,167), Lancaster (41,450) Altoona (38,975) Johnstown (30,936) Allentown (35,416) McKeesport (34,227) Chester (33,988) York (33,708), Williamsport (28,707) etc.

Government, etc.—The present constitution was adopted in 1873. The governor is chosen for a term of 4 years. The general assembly consists of a senate, limited to 50 members chosen for 4 years and a house of representatives chosen for 2 years. The state sends 12 representatives to the lower house of the national congress.

Population—In 1790 434,113 in 1800 602,365 in 1810 811,041 in 1820 1,047,507 in 1830 1,348,233 in 1840 1,724,033 in 1850 2,311,736 in 1860 2,906,215 in 1870 3,521,961 in 1880 4,263,691 in 1890 5,258,014 in 1900 6,363,115. The number of foreign-born in 1900 was 954,216 of whom, 156,845. The southeastern and central sections were to a considerable extent peopled by Germans of the Palatinate, whose language, now much modified, is still heard and is known as "Pennsylvania Dutch."

History—Pennsylvania was colonized by the Quakers under William Penn who obtained his patent as proprietor in 1681. His deputy arrived in that year with some settlers and found at Wissoco within the present limits of Philadelphia, a prosperous Swedish settlement. The city of Philadelphia was laid out in 1682 and in the same year Penn himself came to the colony and concluded a treaty with the Indians. The growth of the colony was rapid from the start, the Quaker settlers being reinforced by German Delaware (the Lower Counties) formed part of Pennsylvania and remained united with Pennsylvania down to the Revolution having however its own legislature after 1703. The Maryland line (Mason and Dixon's line) was established in 1763-67 and thus closed one intercolonial contest. Connecticut asserted a claim to a part of northern Pennsylvania and it was only after the massacre in the Wyoming Valley (1778) that the contention regarding this region was brought to a close. In 1774 the first Continental Congress met at Philadelphia. The Proprietary government came to an end in 1776 immediately after the Declaration of Independence, and a state government was organized. Pennsylvania was the scene of many important events during the Revolution. It was in Philadelphia that the Declaration of Independence was signed. In 1794 occurred the whiskey rebellion, which was suppressed without bloodshed. The battle of Gettysburg the turning point in the Civil War, was fought in this state in 1863.

Persia, pâr'si-ah, or pâr'si-ah (Arabic and Persian, Iran, as Iran). Persia (Iran) is a country of Asia, between lat. 25° and 39° 45' N. and lon. 44° and 65° E. having W. Asiatic Turkey N. Transcaucasia (part of the Russian Empire) the Caspian Sea, and the Russian Transcaspian Territory E. Afghanistan and Beluchistan and S. the Arabian Sea and Persian Gulf. Area, about 640,000 sq. m.

Face of the Country—Persia may be described as consisting of a plateau from 2500 to 3500 feet in elevation, a series of mountain-chains encircling the plateau on all sides except the E. and in some places, an outer border of more or less width consisting for the most part of gentle slopes, low valleys, and level plains. The E. part of the plateau which is in itself traversed by irregular mountain elevations forms the great salt desert (Dasht-i-Kavir) of Khorassan—with its vast deposits of solid rock salt—and the mud desert (Dasht-i-Lut) of Kerman. It is comprised in that sterility which extends from the Atlantic Ocean through Africa, Arabia, Central Asia, and Mongolia to the N. frontier of the Chinese Empire. The plateau seems to overlie a series of mountain ridges whose crests and troughs have become deeply covered with sediment and which appear at intervals rising above the general plateau surface. The mountains which enclose the plateau generally have their slopes clothed with a rich and varied vegetation except those in the south the southern slopes of which is so hot as to render them scarcely fit for human habitation. The excessive temperature is also found in parts of the plains of the W. where moisture is often in excess and forms extensive swamps. The provinces bordering on the Caspian however are strikingly beautiful well watered and wooded, and offer a great contrast to other districts.

Of the mountains the N. chain branching from the Hindu-Kush or its more westerly continuation, the Sedid Koh (Paropamisan mountains) by which it is linked to the Himalayas, traverses Afghanistan and enters Persia on its NE. frontier near lon. 61° E. (NW of the town of Herat, in Afghanistan) where it forms a mountain-region in some parts 200 miles wide. Under the name of the mountains of Khorassan, and on its outer or Russian border as the Damani-Koh it proceeds in a WNW direction across the N. part of the province of Khorassan but it attains its very great elevation before the Caspian is approached. The chain here merges into the Elburz mountains, which on the borders of the provinces of Irak Ajemi and Masanderan attain in the volcanic Mount Demavend the height of nearly or over 19,000 feet. From this point the Elburz stretches WNW in a number of separate lofty ranges, still maintaining an elevation so great that several of its ridges continue covered with snow till the beginning of June. The Elburz chain which many consider as terminating nearly opposite to the SW. corner of the Caspian Sea, is succeeded by the Musrûla mountains and then by Mount Sevelan (or Savalan) which is thought to attain an elevation of nearly 14,000 ft. In the extreme NW is Mount Ararat (about 17,000 ft.). This celebrated volcanic mountain situated on the borders of Russia, Persia and Turkish Armenia, forms the link between the N and W ranges of Persia. The western ranges of Persia (collectively known for a part of their extent as the Zagros Mountains) are connected with the great highland of Armenia on the NW. They and their continuations, together with other parallel ranges, extend in direct NW-SE. courses through the entire country and eastward through Mesopotamia into Helucistan. They are also of great height, attaining in the Koh-i-Dana an absolute elevation of 17,000 ft. above the sea. The innermost chain (or Korud) rises to 12,000-13,000 ft.

Excepting the Aras, which forms the NW frontier the Kizil-Uzen (known in its lower course as the Seid-Rud) and the Gorgan which enter the Caspian Sea, the Kernh Karun, Jerahi etc., affluents of the Tigris and Shat-el-Arab, in Khuzistan and the Bendemir the rivers of Persia are quite insignificant, and by far the greater portion of the country is arid and unproductive. The Karun is virtually the only stream that is navigable for (small) steamers. From the S slopes of the mountain-ranges which rise from the northern edge of the country much water partly the product of perpetual snow descends in streams which soon reach the borders of deserts and are absorbed. The N slopes are so near the basin of the Caspian that the water which they supply has too short a course to allow it to accumulate into rivers. The principal exception is furnished by the Kizil-Uzen (Seid Rud) which breaks through the mountains of Masandaran and reaches the Caspian Sea by the Redbar Pass in the Elburz, after a course of about 350 miles. In Persia there are more than 30 salt lakes, which have no outlets. Lake Urmiah, not far from the Turkish frontier in the NW about 80 miles long, receives upward of a dozen streams, yet its waters are so bitter and saline that fish cannot live in them. Lake Kakhkegan (or Vuriz) in Persia, receives the waters of the Bendemir. On the Afghan border is the vast moraine of Hamon otherwise known as Lake Sowman which at periods of high water receives the Helmand (from Afghanistan).

Climate. Production, Persia.—On the central plateau the climate is intensely cold in winter (especially in February) and extremely hot in summer. The dryness of the atmosphere, however, makes the air generally pure. The shores of the Persian Gulf are scorched in summer by a burning heat. On the S side of the northern mountain ranges snow falls early in November. In such situations as that of Teheran ice is seen up to the middle of March, cold winds from the N prevail in April and even during summer great and sudden changes of temperature are not uncommon. At Teheran the most agreeable month is usually October. On the N side of the mountains, in the plains of Chilan and Masandaran a dry and a rainy season regularly alter each other, and vegetation has a luxuriance not often met with in much lower latitudes. Except on the borders of the Caspian, in certain districts along the Persian Gulf and in the far NW there are few localities in which the annual rain fall exceeds 10 inches.

The long belt of sandy shores which lines the Persian Gulf is barren except where it is interspersed with plantations of date-trees, which here grow to great perfection. Among the mountains of Khuzistan and Luristan forests of oak and other trees are not uncommon though in general they are stunted in their growth. But on the N side of the lofty ranges which overlook the Caspian Sea are magnificent forests of oak ash beech, elm alder birch cypress, walnut, box cypress, and cedar. The ordinary European fruit-trees are largely grown in this region. Extensive open glades often occur on which numerous herds of cattle are reared. In the level and low lying plains the sugar-cane and orange come to perfection the pomegranate grows, the cotton plant and mulberry are extensively cultivated large tracts are occupied by the vine, and orchards with exquisite fruit are seen. Among the cultivated flowers the Persian roses are famous. In the basal plains the only grain under extensive culture is rice and the principal auxiliary crops are cotton indigo, sugar, madder, and tobacco. In Azerbaijan, large rice-fields occupy the low flats which surround Lake Urmiah.

The wild animals comprise the lion leopard (including the cheetah, used for hunting) tiger (in the Caspian region), lynx bear wild boar, hyena, wolf, jackal porcupine, wild ass, gazelle, deer and mountain sheep and goat. Among domestic quadrupeds the horse mule, camel and ox occupy a prominent position. This country is the home of the much-prized Persian cat. Among the birds are pheasants, peacocks, bustards, blackbirds, thrushes and other well known songsters especially the bulbul. Locusts often commit fearful ravages. Fish abound in the Caspian and on the shores of the Persian Gulf.

The mineral wealth of Persia appears to be fairly great, but mining, owing to the general absence of good roads and lack of enterprise, is but indifferently prosecuted. The minerals include lead, copper, iron, silver, tin antimony, arsenic, nickel, and cobalt. Good coal has been found at a number of places (near Teheran and elsewhere), and in thick seams. Sulphur exists in minor quantities and salt pits are abundant. Naphtha occurs in a broad zone extending from Kurdistan to the Persian Gulf. Among the non-metallic minerals the turquoise, which is extensively mined near Nishapur is famous.

Manufactures and Commerce.—Among the leading manufactures of Persia may be mentioned various kinds of silk goods, as taffetas, velvets, and broadens, carpets and rugs of great artistic excellence, shawls, made of the wool of the goats of Kerman, arms, copper-ware gold broadens, and felt goods.

The commerce of the country is extensive, notwithstanding the general absence of roads except such as are traversed by caravans of mules. The principal articles imported are cotton and woollen fabrics, sugar cloth glass, hardware, carriages, petroleum tea, coffee, and drugs. The exports are silk and other stuffs, articles of gold and silver copper ware, carpets, shawls, raw cotton cocoons, rice tobacco pearls, turquoises, dates, lemons dried fruit, opium etc. The chief centres of commerce are Tabriz, Teheran and Isfahan. The more important ports are Bender Abbas, Lingah and Bushira, on the Persian Gulf, and Enzeli (the port of Rehti) Meshed-i-Sar (the port of Kalkraah) and Bender-i-Ghes, on the Caspian Sea. There is but a single line of railway in operation in Persia, that connecting Teheran with Shah Abdul-Azim completed in 1888 and covering 61 miles. Almost the only roads or highways available for carriages are those connecting Teheran with Rehti and Teheran with Kom the former 220 miles in length and the latter 91 miles. An improved mule or caravan track also connects Ahwas with the Karun River. The telegraph lines extend over nearly 6000 miles. The traffic of the Caspian is almost entirely monopolised by Russia that of the Persian Gulf employs a considerable number of vessels, owned for the most part by British Armenian Arab and Indian traders.

Government.—The sovereign (or shah) of Persia is an absolute despot. His principal ministers were until recently the vizir (or sadr) azam (or grand vizier) and the amir-e-dahlan (or lord high treasurer). Both ministers though the mere slaves of their master were in regard to all other persons, as absolute as himself. At the present time there is a ministry of several departments, after the European fashion. The provinces are governed by governors-general and lieutenant-governors. The greatest corruption prevails in the administration. Justice is administered by two classes of courts one deciding according to the Koran and the other according to customary law.

Population.—The population of Persia is estimated at about 8,000,000. In addition to the Persians who constitute the great mass of the inhabitants, there are Kurds, Armenians, Arabs, Turcomans, Beluchis, Jews, Gypsies, etc. Perhaps one-fourth of the people are nomads. The Persians are the chief representatives of the Iranian branch of the Indo-European race. Their Aryan blood has been largely tinged with Turco-Tartar Semitic and other elements. The Tajiks constitute the bulk of the sedentary Persian population. In the SW and W are the Iranian Lurians, a people of mountaineers. The Persians are an intellectually well-endowed race, of quick apprehension, imagination and a lively temperament, and imbued with a strong love for their language and their exquisite national poetry. They are of agreeable address but reputed to be very untrustworthy. The sedentary population belongs mainly to the Shia sect of the Mohammedans. The nomads are generally Sunnites. A remnant of the Gibeans (Paraseni), or fire-worshippers survives in Yazd and Kerman. There is a considerable body of native Christians along the W border.

Persia consists of the following divisions: Azerbaijan, Irak Ajem, Ardalan, Luristan, Khazistan, Fars, Laristan, Kerman, Gilan, Masandaran, Astrabad and Khorasan. The most important cities are Teheran (the capital) with a population of about 250,000, Tabriz, 180,000, Isfahan, 80,000, Meshed, 60,000, Kerman, 50,000-70,000, Yazd, 50,000 (?), Rehti, 40,000 and Kavar, 40,000.

History.—About 550 B.C. a Persian kingdom was established by Cyrus on the ruins of the Median monarchy. Its dominions were extended by him and his immediate successors so that they stretched from the Mediterranean to the Indus and embraced Egypt. In the year 480 B.C. King Xerxes, at the head of a gigantic army sought to effect the conquest of Greece, but he met with disaster. A century and a half later in 334-331 B.C. Alexander of Macedon made himself master of the Persian empire, which at his death, was divided among his successors. After Persia had for some centuries formed part of the Parthian realm a new Persian kingdom arose about A.D. 226 under the dynasty of the Sassanids. About 642 the country became a conquest of the Saracens (Arabs) who established Mohammedanism. The rule of the caliphs lasted until the ninth century. In the first half of the eleventh century the Seljuk Turks made themselves masters of Persia. Towards the close of the twelfth century the Khwarezmians put an end to the Seljuk power. In the early part of the thirteenth century Persia became the prey of the Mongols under Genghis Khan. Towards the close of the fourteenth century Timur, with his Mongol hordes swept over the country. The Safi dynasty founded in 1502, reached its greatest prosperity during the reign of Abbas the Great, 1586-1628. The sceptre of Persia was held from 1730 to 1747 by Nadir Shah, a warrior ruler who invaded India in 1739 and entered Delhi. In 1795 Aga Mohammed, the founder of the present Kayar dynasty ascended the throne. In 1837 Russia conquered the greater part of Persian Armenia. Persia was at war with the India government in 1856-57. In spite of the efforts of the English to secure the ascendancy Russian influence in trade and the economic development of the country has become paramount in the entire northern section of the kingdom.

Length about 1100 miles. Area, about 690,000 sq. m. It is divided into 17 departments (14 of which are provinces) and 2 provinces (not included in departments). Peru, (Ajamarca, Amazonas, Loreto, Libertad, Arequipa, Lima, Callao (provinces)) Huancavelica, Huanuco, Junin, Ica, Ayacucho, Cuzco, Iquitos, Arequipa, Moquegua (provinces) Apurimac, Lambayeque, Tarma, a province of Chile since the war of 1878-85, is still officially included in Peru.

Bel of the Land River—Peru is properly divisible into three physiographic sections which run more or less parallel with each other and with the coast. 1. The coastal region La Costa which lies between the western base of the Andes and the shores of the Pacific mostly an arid desert (except in the NW) and having an average width of about 40 miles. It is intersected at intervals by fertile irrigating streams which support a beautiful vegetation and along which are wide spaces of vineyards, sugar cane and cotton plantations, and fruit-gardens. 2. The Sierra region (or Andean division) which takes in the region of the high Andes extending from the Maritime Central and Eastern (or Oriental) Cordillera. This region of broad extent is made up of lofty mountain-ranges, elevated valleys, and deep ravines. Much of it between the western and middle chains of mountains is cold and inhospitable and known as the Puna (or the Páramo) occupying elevations of 12,000 feet and more. The loftiest summits of the Cordillera rise high above the snow line and several of them seem to attain an elevation of 20,000 ft. or more. Perhaps the loftiest of all these is the Huascarán twin peaked in about lat. 8° 30' S. which is thought to exceed 20,000 (22,000?) ft. In the S. of Peru associated with the Maritime Cordillera are a number of great volcanoes (Chachani, Misti or the volcano of Arequipa, Coropuna) whose elevations are variously stated at from 18,000 to 20,000 ft. Some of these have had violent eruptions as late as the close of the eighteenth century. There is a general convergence of the mountain systems of Peru in what is known as the knot of Cerro de Pasco, between lat. 10° and 11° S. In the SE part of the country, and extending into Bolivia, it the interesting basin of Lake Titicaca, the surface of which lies 12,500 ft above the sea. 3. The third natural region of Peru is the Montaña from the Spanish word monte, meaning a wood or thicket. A few miles beyond the eastern crest of the Cordillera is the warm and steamy woodland, which stretches into the Brazilian territory and contains the head waters of many streams flowing into the Amazon. The chief rivers of Peru are the Marañon, Huallaga, Ucayali, Apurimac and Jachy all having a N course and being tributaries to or forming the Amazon. In the SE is the Madre de Dios one of the head-streams of the Beni (or Madeira). About half of Lake Titicaca is comprised in southern Peru.

Climate, Productions, Transportation, etc.—Rain rarely falls in the coast valleys of Peru W of the Andes, but fogs, called the garra, are frequent. The amount of rain diminishes gradually from the southern tropics to the N borders of Peru. The climate on the coast is sultry and unhealthy but higher up it is mild and salubrious. The mean temperature at Lima in summer is 80° to 84° minimum in winter 60° to 64° Fahr. On the E slopes of the Peruvian Andes rain falls copiously. The soil in the valleys of the upland region is highly fertile and the grains of Europe are successfully raised, even at altitudes of 13,000–14,000 feet. The vast plains E of the mountains, as already noted, are in great part covered with dense forest. In the hotter portions of the country sugar, wheat, maize, cotton, indigo, tobacco, yams, sweet potatoes, cacao, and fine fruits with cinchona bark, sarsaparilla, copaliba, vanilla and other drugs, and valuable timber are the principal products. Many of the rich valleys here have an insular climate. The chief productions of Peru are coffee (mainly in the central part), sugar (chiefly in the coast region), cotton, cacao and coca. The quantity of sugar exported in 1901 was 114,437 tons and of coca 610 tons (worth $10 / ton of cocaine). Rubber is shipped down the Amazon from Iquitos in large quantities. The domestic animals generally bred are the same as in the United States. The llama, alpaca, guanaco and vicuña are natives of the country and the first especially is used as a beast of burden; mules are however mostly employed for traveling. The alpaca is bred for its wool. There are extensive pastures where sheep introduced by Europeans have been acclimated and multiply with great rapidity. The country is extremely rich in mineral resources. The mines of Peru were for a long time the principal source of its wealth but the mining industry still continues in great decadence owing to the absence of capital and roads. The silver mines of Cerro de Pasco are the richest in the republic. Gold is found in most of the departments and there is considerable copper with lead, zinc, tin, etc. At Huancavelica is a celebrated mine of quicksilver. The quantity of silver produced and melted into bars at Cerro de Pasco in 1901 was 1,000,000 ounces. The quantity of copper exported from the same place was 16,800 tons. Deposits of coal are worked at Ilimbahe. The manufacturing industry of Peru are but little developed and in general manufactured goods outside of what can readily be produced on a small scale are imported from Europe and North America in return for raw products. There are some manufactures of cotton and coarse woollen fabrics, boots and shoes, sundries, furniture, machinery, sugar hats (made by the Indians) etc. The bulk of the foreign trade of the republic is with Great Britain, the United States, and Germany. Great Britain takes about half of the exports. An important source of wealth was for some time the immense deposits of guano on the islands and coasts of the republic but the main deposits of the Chincha Islands were exhausted in 1872 and now only minor quantities are obtainable on the islets that still bring to Peru (Lobos de Afuera). The want of roads interposes great obstacles to internal traffic but several railways are in operation connecting the interior districts with the ports which in connection with steamers launched on Lake Titicaca, facilitate the trade of the interior. One of the most remarkable of all railways is that connecting Lima and Oroya (and Cerro de Pasco) which crosses the Andes at an elevation of 15,645 ft and hardly less noteworthy is the road uniting Mollendo with Puno, on Lake Titicaca. The mileage of operating roads in 1902 was 1035.

Government, etc.—The present constitution of Peru was promulgated in 1860 and revised in 1869. The affairs of the country are directed by a president, elected for a term of 4 years and a cabinet of 6 ministers. The legislative body consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The individual departments are represented in the senate by from 1 to 4 members. The term of members in both houses is 6 years. The Roman Catholic is the state religion. Public instruction has made little progress, and in the interior not more than two per cent. of the youths receive education. There are four universities,—at Lima, Cuzco, Arequipa, and Trujillo.

Population, Cities.—There has been no census of Peru since 1874. At that time the population within the present limits of the republic was about 3,000,000. It is not certain that there has been a great increase since in spite of the estimate of 4,600,000 for the year 1896 made by the Geographical Society of Lima. More than one-half of the inhabitants are Indians, who belong to the Quechuan and Aymara stocks. The bulk of the remainder are mestizos, the pure whites mainly descendants of the Spaniards, comprising about one-eighth (or even less) of the population. The chief ports are Callao (the port of Lima), Chinbota, Bata Islay, Pisco de Payta, Huacho, Mollendo, Salaverry and Trujillo. Among the interior towns the more important are Lima (the capital), Huancayo (which had about 130,000 inhabitants in 1903), Arequipa, Chiclayo, Ayacucho, Cuzco and Huanacavelica.

History.—The empire of the Incas (whose subjects were mainly Quechua Indians) which embraced Peru and a vast region in the N, E and S, was at the height of its power at the advent of the Spaniards. The remains of the stupendous public works executed by the dynasty of the Incas attest the relatively high degree of civilization attained by the Incas in this part of America. Pizarro achieved the conquest of Peru in 1531–33. The territories included within the present Ecuador, Bolivia, and Argentina originally formed part of the vice-royalty of Peru, from which they were detached in the course of the eighteenth century. In 1821 San Martín the liberator of Chile from Spanish rule, made his entry into Lima and proclaimed the independence of Peru. The victory of General Sucre over the Spaniards at Ayacucho in Dec. 1824, virtually secured the liberation of the country. Callao the last port of the Spaniards in South America, was evacuated in 1826. Peru in alliance with Bolivia, waged a disastrous war with Chile in 1879–83, which cost her the district of Tarapacá and the territories of Tacna and Arica.

Philadelphia, a port of entry, the third city in population of the United States, the metropolis of Pennsylvania, coextensive with the co. of Philadelphia, is situated on the W. bank of the Delaware River 98 miles (by the ship-channel) from the open sea, 60 miles by rail SW of New York, and 138 miles NE. of Washington D. C. Lat. 39° 57' N.; lon. 75° 10' W. The Schuylkill River which is here crossed by a number of railway and passenger bridges, traverses the city dividing the part known as West Philadelphia from the older portion. Along the Delaware the water-front measures 25 miles, extending from the mouth of Pocomoke Creek (which enters the Delaware near Torrens) on the NE., southward and southward, to the embouchure of Bow Creek at Tinicum Island. The area of the municipality is 139 sq. m., of which a considerable part, especially in the N. is rural in character, while other portions are occupied by suburban districts embracing several places which have almost the character of separate towns,—such as Germantown, Chestnut Hill, Frankford, Manayunk, Falls of Schuylkill, Wissahickon, Bridesburg, and stations the principal of which are Tacony, Torresdale, Byberry, Bensalem, Burlington, Olney, Oxford Church, Roxboro, Millstone, Logan, Taber, Fox Chase, etc. A number of the former independent towns or districts, such as Tioga, Nicetown, Kensington, and Richmond still retain their names to indicate sections of the city. The natural features of the site occupied by Philadelphia are varied. Much of the land near the river, especially southward, is flat and low but in the N. W. and central districts the ground is high and easily drained, the deep channel being mostly a dry gravel resting upon gneiss and schist, although it is in part composed of a tough clay. In the highest parts of Germantown and Chestnut Hill the elevation exceeds 400 feet above sea-level. The city is remarkable for the regularity of its plan, the streets mostly crossing one another at right angles and dividing the town into uniform squares,—those running N. and S. being named by the ordinal numbers from the Delaware westward. A great part of the city is built of the excellent bricks for which Philadelphia is noted. The older parts present many streets of very uniform and somewhat monotonous aspect, but latterly this uniformity has been much broken by the construction of buildings in every variety of style. Especially is this noticeable in the newer northern and western sections of the city and in the heart of the business quarter where an imposing massive architectural feature has been introduced. Philadelphia, known as the city of towers, perhaps surpasses every other large city of the world in the home comforts which it affords to the people of the middle class. The suburban sections, such as Germantown and Chestnut Hill are unsurpassed for their charm. In 1905 there were 283,117 dwellings. The main business thoroughfares are Market Street, a broad avenue, and Chestnut Street, with elegant shops, the east of the principal financial institutions of the city. Walnut Street, in its western part, is the most exclusive of the residence streets, but is not distinguished by any very notable architectural features. Somewhat more imposing in this respect is the spacious avenue known as Broad Street which traverses the greater part of the built-up portion of the city in a N. and S. line and at whose intersection with Market Street is the new city hall. This vast granite and marble pile, commonly known as the Public Buildings, whose construction was begun in 1874 covers an area of 4½ acres and cost, inclusive of its furnishings, about $27,000,000. It measures 486½ ft. by 470 ft. and rises to a height of 247 ft. Its huge tower being capped by a colossal statue of William Penn.

Philadelphia has numerous parks and public squares one of which Fairmount Park contains about 2000 acres and takes rank for extent, natural attractions, and artificial improvements, among the foremost in the world. It is traversed in part by the Schuylkill River and by Wissahickon Creek, the latter being noted for the romantic wildness of the deep glem through which it flows. Among the noted squares are Independence, Franklin, Washington, Logan, and Rittenhouse the last named representing perhaps the most fashionable quarter of the city. Several of the cemeteries are distinguished for excellent landscape effects and costly monumental decoration notably that of Laurel Hill, on the E. bank of the Schuylkill. The streets of the city are provided with a vast system of electric surface railways and an extensive subway approach from the more distant outlying quarters is now, 1906, nearing completion.

The educational institutions and those devoted to higher research are numerous. At the head of the public school system are the boys' high school and the girls' normal and high schools. The University of Pennsylvania, founded in 1740, has spacious and elegant buildings, includes medical, scientific, legal and art schools and has under its management a commodious hospital, laboratories of hygiene and general biology, the Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology, the Flower Astronomical Observatory (lat. $39^{\circ} 58' 2''$ N., lon. $75^{\circ} 16' 39''$ W.) extensive museums of archaeology and ethnology, and a library of upward of 208,000 volumes. The number of students registered in the year 1903-04 was 2692. The Jefferson Medical College, founded in 1835, is one of the leading medical institutions of the country. Other institutions of a related nature are the Philadelphia Medico-Chirurgical College, also with extensive hospitals; the Woman's Medical College, Hahnemann College, Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, Pennsylvania and Philadelphia Dental Colleges, etc. Among the educational institutions of a more general character are the Drexel Institute of Art, Science, and Industry, developed upon a private foundation (1892) with well-equipped laboratories and work-shops, and attended by nearly 3000 students; Williamson Free School of Mechanical Trades, located outside of the city limits, but properly a city foundation; and the famous Girard College, founded through the munificence of Stephen Girard (opened in 1848) which affords instruction and support to thousands of orphan boys. Other institutions of general learning are the Friends' and the Roman Catholic high schools and the William Penn Charter School. The principal art institutions are the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, with schools and large collections, the School of Design for Women, School of Industrial Art and the Spring Garden Institute. The chief scientific institutions are the Academy of Natural Sciences, founded in 1812 with extensive collections in natural history, the American Philosophical Society, the oldest scientific association in the country, founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1743, and the Franklin Institute, founded in 1824. Other learned bodies and foundations are the Pennsylvania Historical Society, Wagner Free Institute of Science, the Geographical Society, American Academy of Political and Social Science, Zoological Society (under whose charge are the ecological gardens located in Fairmount Park) and the Numismatic and Antiquarian Society. The Philadelphia Commercial Museum was founded in 1890 to obtain and disseminate knowledge regarding the products and trade requirements of foreign parts of the world and contains important collections. The Philadelphia Library, with the Ridgway and other branches, has a large and choice collection of books, numbering upward of 250,000 volumes. There are many other large libraries in the city, those of the College of Physicians and of most of the learned societies already mentioned being particularly noteworthy.

Among the prominent buildings that have not yet been referred to are the historic Independence Hall (1732-35) where the Continental Congress met during the period of the American Revolution and where the Declaration of Independence was adopted on July 4, 1776; Carpenter's Hall, where the first Continental Congress assembled in 1774; the post-office, United States custom-house, the Masonic temple (a splendid building in the Norman style) the new United States mint, the houses, the extensive depots of the two trunk lines of railroad entering the heart of the city, the naval asylum and hospital, the United States arsenal, the Philadelphia hospital and almshouse, Pennsylvania Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Mount Airy, Pennsylvania insane asylum, Pennsylvania hospital, Eastern Penitentiary, Moyamensing prison, Memorial Hall (with valuable paintings) and Horticultural Hall in West Fairmount Park, the last two stately structures, which were originally erected for use in the great Centennial Exhibition of 1876. The city contains few sculptural works of note, the most imposing being the Washington Monument, by Slomering of Berlin, standing at one of the entrances to Fairmount Park.

Among the handsomest or most interesting of the educational edifices are the old Swedes' Church erected on an earlier church site, in 1709; Christ Church, St. Mark's Church, Holy Trinity, the Baptist Temple, with accommodation for 6000 worshippers, the Jewish synagogue and the cathedral church of St. Peter and St. Paul (Roman Catholic). Philadelphia is the seat of an Episcopal bishop and of a Roman Catholic archbishop. There are numerous buildings of historic interest from their association with persons and events prominent in the colonial and Revolutionary periods.

Accessible from the sea by the largest merchant steamers connected by navigable waters and by lines of railway with the anthracite coal regions of the state, and being the centre of a system of important railways (the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Philadelphia and Reading) Philadelphia takes a high rank as a seat of foreign, domestic, and coastwise trade. Leading articles of export are corn, flour, coal, petroleum, machinery, livestock and animal products. Lines of steamers connect the city with Liverpool and other European ports, the West Indies and nearly all the important ports of the United States. At League Island in the S. portion of the city is one of the largest of the United States navy yards and near it is Fort Mifflin, the principal defensive military work near the city. The value of exports from the port in 1901 was $72,000,000 and of imports, $48,000,000. The number of American and foreign vessels entering the port of Philadelphia during the year 1901 was 1168, with an aggregate tonnage of 1,897,023, the entering tonnage in 1904 was 1,712,052.

The manufactures of Philadelphia stand second in importance to those of New York. Some of the outer wards (formerly the suburban villages and districts of Manayunk, Haverhill, etc.) are largely occupied by manufacturing establishments, many of them of immense extent. The value of the product in 1901 was $722,137,967, the chief manufactures being those of machinery, sundry and machine-shop products, iron, wares, drugs and chemicals, cotton and woollen goods, carpets, leather clothing, wools, and knitted goods, boots and shoes, glass-ware, cigars and tobacco. The two most important individual industrial establishments of the city whose product may be said to be of a national character are the Baldwin Locomotive Works, the largest of their kind in the world, which in 1905 employed upward of 12,000 hands and which turn out 260-100 locomotives a year, and the Cramp Ship-building Yard, one of the chief centres of the construction of iron and steel vessels of war. The publishing interests of Philadelphia have always been prominently linked with the educational development of the country.

An important feature in the social life of Philadelphia is the great number of benevolent, protective, temperance, and friendly associations, a class of organizations which here attain a development greater perhaps than in any other American city.

The city government is vested in a mayor and a select and a common council. The mayor is elected for a term of 4 years. He has the right of veto of ordinances passed by the council. The members of the select council are elected for a term of 3 years, and those of the common council for 2 years. The principal social element in colonial days was composed of the Friends, many of whose descendants are still found here. The original Swedish colonists were settled chiefly in the quarter now called Southwark. German town was settled by Francis Pastorius, with a colony of Germans holding opinions similar to those of the Quakers. About one-third of the inhabitants of Philadelphia are foreign born—Germans, Irish, French, Italians, Russians, Jews, etc. The population in 1905 included 23,940 negroes and 1277 Chinese, Japanese, and Indians.

History.—In 1639 the Swedes made a settlement within the present limits of Philadelphia, then called by the native name of Wissoco. In 1682 Philadelphia was laid out by William Penn as the capital of his new colony of Pennsylvania. A stone monument marks the place where the treaty is said to have been made between Penn and the Indians. The name of Philadelphia (brotherly love) was given by Penn both in reference to the ancient city of that name in Asia Minor and from its symbolizing principles he had so much at heart. From 1723 to his death in 1790 Benjamin Franklin lived in Philadelphia, and made a deep impress upon the public and social life of the city. The first Continental Congress assembled here on Sept. 5, 1774, and during most of the Revolutionary struggle Philadelphia was the meeting place of Congress. From hence went forth the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1776. The city was occupied by the British from Sept. 1777 to June, 1778. Philadelphia was the seat of government of the United States from 1790 to 1800. The convention which framed the constitution of the United States met in Philadelphia in 1787. In 1854 the districts of Moyamensing, Southwark, Kensington, Northern Liberties, Spring Garden and West Philadelphia, and the boroughs and townships of the entire county of Philadelphia, were consolidated with the city proper. In 1876 the one hundredth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence was celebrated by holding an international exposition in Fairmount Park.

The population of Philadelphia was 4600 in the year 1709, 12,500 in 1790, 28,523 in 1800, 41,220 in 1840, 83,860 (county 258,087) in 1880 (the city having become coextensive with the county) 565,229 in 1870, 674,022 in 1890, 847,170 in 1890, 1,040,964 in 1900, 1,293,697.

Philippine (Filipino) Islands (Sp. Islas Filipinas see Isle de Philippines) a large and important group of the Eastern Archipelago, forming the N division and consisting since Dec 1898 a possession of the United States. They lie chiefly between lat. 5° 35' and 19° 38' N (or including the Sulu, or Jolo, Islands on the S and the Marianas on the N which are included within the treaty rights of the United States between 4° 40' and 21° 16' N) and lon. 116° 40' and 126° 34' E having N and E the Pacific Ocean, W the China Sea, and S the Celebes and Moluccas. There are upward of 1000 named islands and islets and about 1500 unnamed. The principal islands are Luzon, Mindanao, Palawan (Paragu), Mindoro, Panay, Negros, Cebu, Bohol, Leyte, Samar and Masbate. Total area of the land-surface, 116,938 sq. m. Pop. as determined by the census of March 1903 7,035,426 of which number the island of Luzon contained about one-half or 3,793,507. The total population was distributed through about 13,466 pueblos or barrios (villages and communes). The islands are largely of volcanic formation and traversed by irregular chains of mountains whose trend is generally N and S. The chief mountain system is that bearing the name of the Caraballo Mountains, in Luzon. It is divided into three branches, — viz. Cordillera Occidental, Caraballo or Cordillera Central (or del Norte in its more northerly part) and Caraballo de Baler (also known as the Cordillera Oriental and Sierra Madre) the last-named with a southerly extension or transverse arm known as the Caraballo del Sur (see Luzon). These mountains rise in numerous crests and summits to 4000–7000 feet (Pagsanjan, in the Cordillera del Norte, 7250 ft., data in the Cordillera Central estimated at from 7400 to 8300 ft.). Their orographic relations have not yet been fully ascertained, and even their nomenclature is variously accepted by different geographers (as seen in the transposition of Caraballo Occidental for Caraballo Central). Southward of Lingayen Gulf and extending to Manila Bay are the Zambales Mountains (4000–5000 ft.), which define in this section the W coast of the island. Eastward of this range lies the great valley or depression, about 160 miles in length and with an average width of scarcely less than 50 miles, which is traversed in great part by the Rio Grande de la Pampanga, and the lower portion of which is occupied by Manila Bay. In this fertile tract are located about 1,750,000 of the inhabitants or about two-fifths of the population of the island. In Mindanao are several ranges and every island has ridges and chains of greater or lesser magnitude. The loftiest or most prominent mountain summits are Apo (or Davao) a volcanic volcano on Mindanao, 10,211 feet, and the culminating point of the archipelago, Mayán or Alibay (frequently active) in Luzon 8300 (8900?) ft., Balón on Mindoro about 8860 ft. Bandjan (Luzon) and Laroag (Luzon). The rivers are numerous and large in the chief islands, which have also lakes or inland seas. Among the rivers are the following: in Luzon, Cagayán (Rio Grande de Cagayán the largest stream in the island group), Agno Grande, Abra (Rio Grande de la Pampanga), Pangasinan etc. in Mindanao, Agusan (or Balmán) and Palangan (or Rio Grande de Mindanao the second largest of the Philippine rivers) (the other islands have numerous streams, many of which are navigable for some distance. Among the lakes are the Laguna de Bay, Taal, Cebuana, and Bato in Luzon, Jassan Maguindanao, and Bulacan in Mindanao, and Naupia in Mindoro).

The climate is tropical in general, but varies according to the locality. The mean annual temperature is 80° with extremes of 100° and 60°. The mean annual rainfall at Manila is 75.43 inches. The group is within the range of the monsoons and violent hurricanes are frequent. From May to September the W. coasts are deluged with rain while the October monsoon brings rain to the E. coasts which are at other seasons dry. The region is pre-eminently one of seismic disturbances and earthquakes are registered in different parts of the archipelago at intervals of but very few weeks or even days. Some of these are of a markedly destructive character. Among the more recent seismic vibrations were those of Dec. 1901 and of Aug. 1902. The high temperature and abundance of moisture produce a luxuriant vegetation, so that the Philippines are capable of yielding all kinds of colonial and a varied European produce. The general features of the indigenous flora ally it to the flora of the larger Sunda Islands — Borneo and Celebes. Rice, millet, maize, sugar, indigo, hemp, tobacco, coffee, cacao and cotton are raised and sugar, coconuts, bananas, pineapples, bread, numerous fine fruits, timber for ship building and the woods are among the products. The area under cultivation is still limited. The forests remain of vast extent and cover 80,000 sq. m. of surface. Gold, silver, copper, lead, iron and coal (of Tertiary age) are mined in considerable quantities. Pulphur and pumice can also be found. The water buffalo (or carabao) and most of the domestic animals common in Europe are raised; the horse, introduced by the Spaniards, runs wild among the mountains. The wild animals comprise the antelope, buffalo (or carabao), deer, bear and monkey; the crocodile is found in the rivers and lakes; the tortoise abounds in the shores. Fish are very abundant and sea-weeds numerous. Among the birds of the islands are the enormous large Gal (nucula pigeons and a moupin turkey (or megapod). The fauna, which most closely resembles that of the neighboring Malay Islands shows in the differentiation of its forms the effects of long-continued isolation. Pearl, pearl oyster, shell, the sea-slug and edible birds nests are important articles of export to China. The leading industries of the islands are the production as manufacture of hemp (abaca), tobacco and cigars, sugar and copra, or dried meat of the coconut (the export values of which in 1904 were: hemp $21,794,960, tobacco, $2,903,622, sugar $2,008,500 and copra $2,527,019) the manufacture of liquor, ship building and the cutting of lumber. Minor industries are represented in printing and publishing and the manufacture of textiles and straw goods. Domestic weaving is pretty generally carried on by the women. The value of the exports in 1901 was $24,503,543. In 1902 $22,671,904. In 1903 $29,874,328 and in 1904 $37,033,165. The imports for the corresponding years were valued at $30,163,471, $33,942,166, $34,049,836 and $34,327,461. Communication is had with the outside world and between the islands themselves by steamer and telegraph; the inter island traffic is considerable. The roads are bad except in the vicinity of Manila, and the railroad between Manila and Dagupan (on Lingayen Gulf) 130 miles in length, is the only one in the islands.

The Philippine Islands are peopled by a large number of tribes, almost wholly of the Malay type, the majority being Tagals and Visayas; the Negritos, or oriental negroes, are supposed to be aboriginal. The Filipinos represent every stage of civilisation from savagery to a high state of culture. Eagerness to acquire knowledge and an artistic sense are prominent traits. Some of the native tongues, such as the Tagalog and Visayan, are sufficiently developed to serve for the purposes of literary production. The educated Filipinos are masters of the Spanish language. Industrially the people have advanced only along a few lines. The Roman Catholic religion is largely diffused among the natives. The Moros are Mohammedan Malays. Of the foreign population the census of 1903 showed 8135 born in the United States, 5064 born in Europe (3888 in Spain), 41 635 in China, and 921 in Japan with a few hundred others not specially classified.

The Philippines were discovered by Magellan in 1521. The foundations of Spanish dominion were laid in 1565-72. Manila was founded in 1571. The rule was oppressive and insurrections were frequent. Towards the close of the Spanish tenure the islands progressed favorably owing to the abolition of restrictions on trade. In 1898, as a result of the Spanish American war (the opening episode of which was the battle in Manila Bay) by the treaty of Paris signed Dec. 10 the Philippines were ceded to the United States, Spain receiving $20,000,000. In Feb. 1899 the Filipinos, under Aguinaldo, rose in arms against the American rule and a fierce struggle ensued. Aguinaldo was captured in March 1901 and in 1902 civil government was established by the United States throughout the islands. Capital Manila on Manila Bay W coast of Luzon. In March 1903 the island-group was divided into 49 civil provinces, 8 military districts, and the city of Manila the civil provinces in turn being divided into municipalities and townships, and these again into pueblos or barrios (the latter being a small settlement with outlying territory). The St. Thomas University with several faculties, including one of medicine, is located in the capital city.

Pittsburg, or Pittsburgh, a city and the capital of Allegheny co., Pa. and a port of entry is 260 miles (direct) W by N of Philadelphia, on the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio and other railroads. Lat. 40° 20' N. lon. 80° 2' W. Within the angle formed by the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers where they meet and give birth to the Ohio lies the original Pittsburgh the inner point being the site of the old Fort Duquesne of the French, and of the later Fort Pitt, the nucleus of the city. The greater part of the closely built-up portion of the city, with river frontage on both the NW and the SW extending over several miles, lies on the flat river-tongue and the gradually ascending slopes which ultimately attain elevations of 400-500 feet. Until 1872 the city was bounded by the two rivers, but during that year it crossed the SW boundary by the annexation of the extensive manufacturing district formerly comprised in the boroughs of Temperanceville, Union, West Pittsburg, Allentown, Mount Washington, Birmingham, East Birmingham, South Pittsburg etc., and since that time it has been further enlarged through annexation. Pittsburgh is the second city of the state in population and the leading centre of the iron and steel manufacturing industries of the country, the product of pig-iron being about one-fourth that of the total product of the United States, and of steel more than one-half. The quantity of iron used by the Pittsburgh furnaces and mills is upward of 1,000,000 tons annually the capacity of some of the individual steel and iron-works being equal to the production of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 tons of metal (pig iron, steel rails, Bessemer steel, armor plate, beam-steel) per year. Pittsburgh has some of the largest blast-furnaces in the world and also some of the most extensive works for the construction of steel bridges. Other leading industries are the manufacture of plate- and lamp-glass, electrical appliances, railroad-brakes, cars and locomotives, engines, stoves, silver-plated and other wares, hardware, cork, aluminum, etc. The city is in the centre of one of the richest coal regions of the globe, and it is also the outlet of the vast oil-fields of the Allegheny and Ohio river basins. Natural gas is a far-reaching product of the region and is extensively used in the city for both manufacturing and domestic purposes. The homes of the iron city are chiefly on the highlands to the E. The various parts of Pittsburgh and its suburbs are connected by numerous substantial bridges and lines of steam, cable and electric cars. Among the notable buildings of Pittsburgh are the court-house, city-hall, post-office, the Exposition buildings, the Roman Catholic and St. Paul's cathedrals, United States arsenal, jail, Carnegie Library and Institute building (with an extensive library, music-hall art-gallery and natural-history museum) and the Phipps Conservatory situated in Shesley Park, to the E. of the city but in the heart of the residential quarter. Among the educational institutions are the Western University of Pennsylvania (mainly located in Allegheny), the Pennsylvania College for Women, Carnegie Institute (already referred to), Pittsburgh Academy, Bishop Bowman Institute, and Pittsburg College of the Holy Ghost. There are numerous charitable institutions (asylums, hospitals). A zoological collection is maintained in Highland Park. Between Pittsburgh and its neighbor, Allegheny, there is close community of interest in all matters pertaining to social and educational advancement, and together they form a centre of culture as well as of great industrial life.

History.—Fort Duquesne, a French trading-post, settled in 1754, occupied the site where Pittsburgh now stands. In 1755 the British dispatched an expedition under Braddock to capture it, which met with disaster. They took the place in 1758, and erected a fortification which they called Fort Pitt, in honor of William Pitt, then prime minister of England. The town of Pittsburgh began to be settled in 1765. It became a county town in 1791, was incorporated as a borough in 1844, and was chartered as a city in 1816. Poland (Pól) Polska pol ská meaning Sat land

La Polónia Gar Polna polen Pr Pol gne po loñ) an extensive country of central Europe which existed for many centuries as an independent and powerful state, but, having fallen a prey to internal dissensions was dismembered in the latter part of the eighteenth century by Austria, Russia, and Prussia, and incorporated with their dominions. In the early part of the seventeenth century the Polish kingdom had an area of about 375 000 sq. m. making it the most extensive realm (not counting colonial possessions) in Christendom excepting Russia. It stretched from the frontiers of Hungary and the Turkish Empire to the Baltic and from Germany for E. into what is now Russia. In the W. it reached almost to the Oder and on the E. it extended far beyond the Dniester. The territory thus marked out formed a compact kingdom embracing Great and Little Poland (in the extreme W. and SW.), West Prussia, Masovia (with Warsaw), Cuyavia (W. of Masovia), Podolia (E. of Masovia), Red Rumania (part of modern Poland) and a district to the N. V. Lithuania, Podolia, the Ukraine, Lithuania and Livonia. Lithuania, which was completely merged in the Polish realm in 1569, comprised a vast area in the NE. At the time of the first partition in 1772 the area was not far from 500 000 sq. m., and the population is estimated to have been about 12 000 000. Of the territories comprised in the Polish kingdom in the seventeenth century, about six-sevenths are now included in the Russian Empire. Of this about one-sixth the extreme western portion the heart of old Poland (with Warsaw) constitutes what is known as Russian Poland. The Austrian portion of Poland constitutes the crown land of Galicia, in which the Poles are politically dominant, although somewhat outnumbered by the Ruthenians. The portion of the old kingdom included in Prussia constitutes the provinces of Posen and West Prussia, in the former of which the Polish language predominates and the district of Eupland, in East Prussia. The number of Poles in the world is in round numbers about 15 000 000. There are about 8,000 000 in Russia of whom about three-fourths live in Poland proper. Prussia has over 3,000 000 Poles and Austria nearly as many. There is a large Polish population in the United States.

The Poles are numerically the most important body of the Slavs next to the Russians, to whose language the Polish is most closely related. Their religion is Roman Catholic. Russia is making great efforts to Russinize the Poles within her dominions, and in Lithuania and other portions of the old Polish kingdom outside Poland proper Russification has made great progress. Prussia is also prosecuting the policy of denationalizing the Poles, but has met with little success. In Austria-Hungary the Poles are entrained in their political activity and there Cracow (the capital of the Polish kingdom previous to the seventeenth century when it was superseded by Warsaw) and Lemberg are foci of Polish national life.

Poland was raised to the rank of a kingdom about the beginning of the eleventh century. It had for some time already been under the rule of the dynasty of Piast, and Christianity had been introduced shortly before. Upon the death of Casimir the Great in 1333 the male line of the Piasts became extinct. Casimir was succeeded by Louis the Great of Hungary whose daughter and successor Hedwig married in 1386 Jagiello grand prince of Lithuania, who became Ladislaus II of Poland. The dynasty of Jagiello came to an end in 1572 and the crown of Poland (which now formed one commonwealth with Lithuania) was made elective. The first partition of Poland, between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, took place in 1772, the second, between Russia and Prussia, in 1793, the third, between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, in 1795. In 1807 Napoleon created a semi-independent state out of a fragment of Poland, to which the name of Duchy of Warsaw was given. This disappeared in 1813 and out of the bulk of it the congress of Vienna, in 1815, constituted a new kingdom of Poland, which was placed under the Russian dynasty. In consequence of the insurrection of 1830-31 the Poles were deprived of their constitutional liberties. The name Kingdom of Poland is still given to this portion of the Russian territories, but the country is now treated in all respects as an integral part of the Russian Empire, and constitutes the so-called governments of the Vistula, under the administration of a special governor-general. It is bounded N and W by the territories of Russia on the NE and E by the Russian governments of Kovno, Vilna, Grodno, and Volhynia, and S by Galicia. It is divided into the governments of Warsaw, Kalisz, Piotrkow, Radom, Lublin, Plock, Kielce, Siedlce, Lomza, and Suwalki. Area, 49,150 sq. m. Pop. in 1897, 9,453,943. About two-thirds of the inhabitants are Poles. There are about 1,500,000 Jews, 1,000,000 Russians, 250,000 Germans, and 300,000 Lithuanians. The capital is Warsaw.

The most characteristic surface feature of Russian Poland is its uniformity. With the exception of the Carpathian foothills along its SW boundary it presents an almost unbroken plain, composed partly of gently waving slopes partly of rich alluvial flats, and in part of woody tracts and moraines. One of the highest elevations of the land is the Lyza Gora, or Bald Mountain, to the S near Kielce, 1850 (6000') feet. The drainage is wholly into the Baltic Sea. The principal streams are the Vistula with its tributaries the Wieprz, Pilica, and Bug (with the Varena), the Warthe and Proana, tributaries of the Oder, and the Niemna.

The country is in part an excellent agricultural region and in 1903 there were 11,366,743 acres under crops, the cereals being, in the order of their importance, rye, oats, barley, and wheat. Flax and hemp are extensively cultivated. The forests of Poland still cover an area of nearly 7,860,000 acres, and furnish valuable timber. The minerals include the ores of iron, copper, and zinc, salt, and coal, the last named being extensively mined, especially in the Dombrowsa region. The most important manufactures of the country are those of metal products, textiles (mainly in the region about Lodz), sugar and liquors. Poland has a single university that of Warsaw.

Polynesia, pol'e-ne'e-she-a (see many islands) includes, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, the multitude of minor islands scattered over the Pacific Ocean in a belt chiefly within 30 degrees on each side of the equator from 135° E. to 135° W. The islands are distributed into numerous groups having a general direction from NW to SE. The principal groups to the N. of the equator are the Pelew Ladrone, Caroline Marshall (Ralik) and Radick, Gilbert or Kingman (partly S. of the equator) and Hawaiian Islands all of which except the last belong to what is called Micronesia. S. of the equator are the Bismarck Archipelago, Fiji Friendly (or Tonga) Samoa, Solomon, New Hebrides, New Caledonia, Loyalty, Banks, Society, Marquesas, Low (or Tuamotu) Austral Cook (or Hervey) and other minor groups, besides numerous detached islands, or Easter and Pitcairn Islands. It is customary with late writers to exclude Micronesia, and with nearly all to exclude Melanesia (which sea) from the Polynesian limits, chiefly for linguistic and ethnological reasons. On the other hand, many geographers include New Zealand within the application of the term. The islands are for the most part of coral formation many presenting the regular atoll form with circular reefs and lagoons. Others present fringed and elevated reefs and some active volcanoes, the summits of the mountains ranging to upward of 13,000 feet (Hawaii Islands). In the lower coral islands the elevations do not generally exceed 300 feet.

The temperature of Polynesia is comparatively moderate and the climate is delightful and salubrious. Mean annual temperature of the Hawaiian Islands, 2° temperature of the Society Islands, from 70 to 80 rarely reaching 90°. The SE tropical wind generally prevails but NW and SW winds are not uncommon. Hurricanes are rare and earthquakes slight and not of frequent occurrence. The refreshing coolness of the trade winds and a regular but not excessive supply of moisture are favorable to a luxuriant vegetation. There are, however, many uninhabited islands where vegetation is scanty and the water supply very deficient. The fauna of most of the Polynesian islands is a defective one markedly wanting in mammalian and reptilian types and exhibiting in numbers of distinctive generic and specific forms the influence of long-continued isolation.

The natives of Polynesia are in general a well-formed tall active, and intelligent people. They consist of three or more apparently distinct races having Malay affinities and are spread over all the central and E portions of Polynesia, where one common language varying in dialects is spoken but in Micronesia the languages are of a distinct character and in the SW the people and languages approximate to the Melanesian if not to the Negrito type.

Some of the islands or the Ladrões were discovered by Magellan in 1521 and the Marquesas by Mandavia in 1595 but it was not till the second half of the eighteenth century that Wallis, and especially Cook explored and described the leading island groups. After a time missionaries succeeded in spreading Christianity and to some extent, civilization in the principal islands. Cannibalism still prevails in some groups. The population varies continually on account of wars, migrations, and pestilence but no proper data exist for affording even an approximation to the real numbers. For further information see the individual groups and islands.

The islands of Rügen (fringed as a sea-side resort) Usedom and Wollin are comprised in the province. There are many lakes in the province, some of them close to the coast. The principal crops are cereals, potatoes, beets, and tobacco. Pomerania is a region of large agricultural holdings. Large numbers of cattle are reared and smoked fish and smoked geese are important products. There are vast ship-building yards at Stettin. The province consists of the government districts of Stettin, Stralsund, and Rügen. The capital is Stettin. The town of Greifswald is the seat of a noted university. Pomerania was occupied at the beginning of the Middle Ages by the Wends, a Slavic people, and it was ruled by Slavic princes down to 1037. By the Peace of Westphalia, in 1645 Brandenburg came into possession of the greater part of Farther Pomerania, and Nearer Pomerania passed to Sweden. In 1720 Sweden ceded a large portion of her Pomeranian possessions to Prussia. In 1814 the remainder of Swedish Pomerania was given to Denmark and in the Congress of Vienna (1814-15) this was transferred to Prussia.

Pompeii, pom-pi-ye, an ancient city of Campania, Italy the remains of which are near the sea. 12 miles by rail SE of Naples. It was overwhelmed (together with Herculaneum) by the first recorded eruption of Vesuvius about 5 miles distant the full activity of which began on Aug. 24, A.D. 79 and culminated in the catastrophe of the day following. At the time of its destruction the city was situated on the navigable Sarno (the modern Sarno) from which it has since been separated by a deflection of the stream. For more than sixteen centuries Pompeii's exact site appears to have been unknown and its name almost forgotten. But in 1733 ditch-digging accidentally revealed the ruins of the buried city which soon became an object of attention. Excavations were commenced in 1755 and have been continued to the present time. Pompeii which was founded by the Oenotri and which appears for the first time in history about 510 B.C. was enclosed by walls (with a circumference of 2343 yards) entered by 8 gates and had numerous streets (14-24 feet in width) paved with lava, terraced houses of one and two stories (the shop fronts being still plainly visible) many lines of a superior order and richly decorated with mural paintings, mosaics and sculptures a chalcidæum (or market-place and forum) theatres (one now accommodating 3000 spectators) temples baths etc. An amphitheatre at the NE end of the town gave accommodation to 20 000 spectators. At the time of its destruction Pompeii was a Roman city of third rank and contained a population. It is thought, of 25 000-30 000. It probably less than 1500 of these perished. The city was buried beneath a cap of pumice, tuff and ash having a thickness of 15-30 feet, much of which has been removed revealing objects of all kinds in an extraordinary state of preservation. Most of the earlier objects removed from Pompeii are deposited in the Museo Nazionale at Naples. The place was largely wrecked by an earthquake in the year 63 but it would seem that the destruction had been in greater part repaired when the volcanic blow came 16 years later.

Under its jurisdiction are the Vieques, Culebra, and Mona islands and a number of minor islets. Area 3500 sq. m. Length about 100 miles. A range of mountains (known in different parts as the Cordillera Central, Sierra de Cayey, Sierra de Luquillo, etc.) runs through the island from E to W. Its loftiest peak, El Yunque being 3700-3800 feet high. In the interior are extensive savannas, on which numerous herds are pastured and along the coasts are tracts of level fertile land. Nearly the whole of the N coast is lined with navigable lagoons, bays, and creeks deep enough for vessels of considerable burden, but the N coast is subject to heavy ground seas, which beat against the cliffs with great violence. Porto Rico lies within the region of the NE trade-winds. The climate is generally salubrious, showing a mean annual temperature of 78° to 82°. The maximum summer heat is about 100° while the minimum temperature is 56° on the lowlands, and considerably less on the interior mountains. The annual rainfall at San Juan is about 60 inches, but at certain points on the NE coast it reaches 100 inches or even more. The island has been frequently visited by hurricanes, a particularly disastrous one having been that of Aug. 8, 1899. Remains of the former great extent of primeval forest are still to be found on the upper mountain slopes, but the major part of the island is now under cultivation or in farms. The native vegetation includes many of the common tropical types, resinous and medicinal plants, palms, tree-ferns, lobelia, ebony cedar, and sandal wood. The indigenous fauna is very scanty and the mammals are represented only by bats, the lesser rodents and the agouti. There seem to be no noxious reptiles, and the insect pests are not numerous. The most characteristic animal is a giant land-tortoise. The minerals include gold, copper, iron, molybdenite, mercury, platinum, chlorite, etc. but the mineral resources would appear to be limited. There are extensive phosphate deposits along the S coast, and guano has been largely worked in Mona Island off the W coast. The area of the land-surface under actual cultivation is probably not much short of 25 per cent. of the whole area. The chief product of the island is coffee, grown at elevations of 500-5500 ft. of which the yield in 1903 was 33,450,000 pounds. Upward of 60,000 acres are under sugar cultivation and 14,000 under tobacco (with an annual yield of some 12 000 000 pounds) The fruit product (bananas pineapples, oranges, etc.) is also very large. The salmou yield a vast quantity of salt (about 16,000 000 pounds annually) and are a source of considerable wealth. There are as yet no manufactures of any importance. The value of the exports in 1903-04 was $16,013,391 of which upward of $11 000 000 went to the United States (sugar $8 688 951 tobacco, $1 721 062). The value of the imports was $12 685,984 ($11 500 000 from the United States). Much attention has latterly been given to stock raising, and cattle are exported in considerable numbers to the Lesser Antilles and Europe. Means of internal communication are scanty the total length of good roadways hardly exceeding 400 miles. Most of the lines of communication are mere trails. There are about 140 miles of railway. The executive authority of the island is vested in a governor assisted by an executive council and a house of delegates. The island is divided into the 7 departments of Agundilla, Arcebo, Bayamón, Guayama, Humacao, Mayaguez and Ponce. Since the occupation of the island by the United States a comprehensive system of primary education has been introduced attendance at schools being made compulsory. High criminal and agricultural schools have also been established. Capital San Juan. Porto Rico was discovered by Columbus in 1493. In 1510 it was conquered by the Spaniards under Ponce de León. The numerous native population was soon exterminated as a result of the cruel treatment by the Spaniards. The island was ceded by Spain to the United States by treaty of Dec. 1898. Pop. in 1899 952 243 of which the whites numbered 539 426.

Face of the Country. Climate.—The coast is occasionally bold, but is mostly low and marshy and permits of a number of good harbors, but the only large indented one are the bays of Setúbal and of the Tagus, on the latter of which is Lisbon. The interior of Portugal especially in the northern half is generally mountainous, a number of ranges stretching across the country mostly in a NE and SW or an E and W direction forming a succession of river-basins, while the ramifications, projecting in all directions, enclose many beautiful valleys. The loftiest range is the Serra da Estrela a link or continuation of the central chain which stretches across Spain between Old and New Castile and between León and Extremadura. In the Marão, near Covilhã, it rises to an elevation of 6540 feet. In the NW a branch of the Spanish Sierra Maestra taking the name of Penagache, enters Portugal and attains in the Peneda a height of 4500 ft. Of nearly equal altitude is the Serra de Nogueira in the NE while somewhat loftier summits (Montemaro) extend towards the central Estrela range. The Cabo da Roca which forms the western spur of the Serra da Cintra, and the westernmost point of continental Europe, abuts upon the Atlantic Ocean as the Promontorium Magnum of the Romans (406 ft.). The principal plains and valleys are those of Almeida, the Terra de Bragança, Chaves Villares, and Beira. Granitic generally forms the nucleus of the mountains overlaid in the N by micaceous schist and other Aene rocks. In the S limestone is abundant.

Few countries, in proportion to their extent, are better supplied with large and navigable streams. The principal rivers have their upper courses in Spain. These are the Minho in the N forming part of the boundary between Portugal and Spain the Douro which first skirts the E frontier in a SW direction and then pursues its course W to the ocean at Oporto the Tagus, flowing in a SW direction through the middle of the country and the Guadiana in the SE. The last-named river where it reaches Portuguese territory bends abruptly to the S forms for some distance the boundary between Portugal and Spain then for nearly 100 miles in a Portuguese river and at the end of its course is again a border stream. The Vouga, Mondego, Sabor and a number of other streams have their courses wholly in Portugal. The climate of Portugal is greatly modified by the proximity of the sea and the height of the mountains. In general the winter is short and mild, and in some places never completely interrupts the course of vegetation. Early in February the vegetation is in full vigor. During the month of July the heat is often extreme, and, rain seldom falling the whole country particularly along the coast, assumes a parched appearance. With the copious showers of September a second spring sets in, and the fields again become covered with flowers and verdure. Winter usually begins about the end of November. From October to April deluges of rain occur and violent hurricanes and thunderstorms are not infrequent. The climate is generally salubrious, especially in the elevated regions. Shocks of earthquake are sometimes felt, particularly in the vicinity of the capital which was wholly wrecked in 1755.

Productions Manufactures, Commerce.—The flora of Portugal is an extremely varied one, and in its luxuriance and diversity of types is the richest in Europe. Many of the mountains are covered with fine forests, among which the ordinary oak and the cork tree are conspicuous. In the central provinces magnificent chestnut-trees abound and in the S the date, fig almond and the American oil olive thrive. Other types of vegetation are the rhododendron myrtle rosemary numerous heaths, and the cistus, the last named the characteristic floral form of the vast olivaceous moor, with their slender like and superbly blossomed shrubs. Fruits of excellent quality are common in every quarter and in the warmer districts the orange lemon olive and melberry are cultivated on an extensive scale. The most important branch of industry is the cultivation of the vine. The well known port wine the produce of the vineyards watered by the upper Douro, form the staple export. Agriculture is at a very low ebb and Portugal fails in ordinary years to raise cereals in sufficient quantity to meet its own consumption. Wheat barley oats flax and hemp are cultivated in the elevated tracts and rice in the lowlands. Of the entire area of the kingdom somewhat more than 2 per cent is under vineyards 1 per cent under fruit-trees 12.5 per cent under cereals and about 3 per cent under forest. The mineral wealth which includes the ores of iron copper lead, zinc the gold arsenic, antimony and manganese, besides sulphur salt, and gypsum is great, but the production in the mines is limited.

The manufactures of Portugal have acquired some importance in the larger towns. Among the products may be mentioned textiles (cottons silks, laces, woollens) arms, porcelain earthenware, lace, machinery laundry products tin ware, cutlery leather gloves, cork, hats, confectionery fine soap jewelry glass paper and tobacco. Ship-building is extensively carried on.

The length of sea-coast and the navigable rivers furnish great facilities for commerce, and railways connect the principal cities with the capital or with the commercial centers of Spain. Foreign commerce is a leading interest. The principal exports include wine, live-stock cork oil sardines, fruit (particularly chestnuts, walnuts almonds, olives, oranges, and lemons) metal-ore silk wool and comestibles. The largest customers for Portuguese wines are England and Brazil. The quantity of wine exported in 1905 was 49,134,500 litres of common wine and 25,827,440 litres of liquor wine. The principal seaports are Lisbon (the capital) Oporto, Setúbal Faro, Figueira, and Viana. In 1904 there were 1486 miles of railway in operation.

Divisions Colonies Population Government.—The population of Portugal (exclusive of the Azores and Madeira Islands) according to the census of 1900 was 5,016,267. The increase in the preceding decade was 8 per cent.

The following table gives the old divisions of Portugal and the modern districts into which they are subdivided.

The Azores and Madeira Islands are generally regarded as integral parts of the kingdom proper. They have a combined area of 1336 sq m. and their population in 1900 was 406,865. The dependencies and colonies are, in Africa the Cape Verde Islands (Annoa, Prince's (Príncipe) and St. Thomas (São Thomé) islands, Angola, and Portuguese East Africa and in Asia, Goa, Daman (or Damão) and Diu (in India), Macao (in China) and Timor (in part) etc. (in the Eastern Archipelago).

The area of the colonial possessions is about 843,000 sq m of which all but about 1 per cent. is in Africa. Their population is variously estimated at between 8,000,000 and 16,000,000. In 1822 Brazil, the most important of the Portuguese colonies, cut loose from the mother country.

The government is an hereditary constitutional monarchy. The crown may descend to a female. The parliament (General Cortes) consists of an upper and a lower chamber ('Camara dos Pares, or House of Peers, and Camara dos Deputados or House of Commons). The law of 1836 provides for the abolition of hereditary peerage by gradual process. The established religion is the Roman Catholic. There are hardly any Protestants. Ecclesiastical affairs are administered by a patriarch at Lisbon, 2 archbishops (of Braga and Evora) and 14 bishops.

Education in Portugal is in a comparatively backward state. At the head of the institutions of learning is the venerable university of Coimbra, founded about 1288. There are polytechnic and medical schools at Lisbon and Oporto, naval, agricultural and fine-arts schools at Lisbon and numerous industrial and academic schools scattered throughout the country at large. The National Library of Lisbon contains about 400,000 printed volumes and an immense collection of manuscripts. The language of the Portuguese is closely allied to the Spanish. The oldest extant written documents in pure Portuguese date from about the close of the twelfth century. Portuguese is the language of the Brazilians.

History.—Portugal comprises the greater part of the ancient Roman province of Lusitania. Early in the fifth century the Suevi established a realm in this part of the Iberian Peninsula, which was swallowed up towards the close of the sixth century in the kingdom of the Visigoths. In the beginning of the eighth century the country shared the fate of the rest of the peninsula and was conquered by the Arabs (Saracens). After some centuries of Moslem domination the Christian power organized under the kings of León and Castile, reasserted itself in this region, and about 1095 Alfonso the VI. created himself in law Henry of Burgundy count of Portugal the country having been so named from Portus Cale (Oporto). This was the beginning of a new state, before whose power that of the Moors receded. In 1139 Alfonso (Afonso), the son of Henry of Burgundy after a great victory over the Moors at Ourique, assumed the royal title. In 1147 Lisbon was wrested from the Moors. Early in the fifteenth century the Portuguese, under the auspices of Prince Henry the Navigator entered upon a great career of maritime exploration and for a considerable period they led the Christian world into the field of geographical discovery. Madeira and the Azores were discovered (or rediscovered) and became Portuguese possessions. Before the year 1492 they had traced the whole of the W. coast of Africa. In 1482 Vasco da Gama opened the sea-route to India around the Cape of Good Hope. In 1500 Cabral set up the flag of Portugal in Brazil. In the first two decades of the sixteenth century Almeida and Albuquerque founded a great Portuguese colonial establishment in the East Indies. In 1580 Portugal was subjected to the yoke of Philip II. king of Spain. This foreign domination was terminated in 1640 by a rising headed by the duke of Braganza who ascended the throne under the name of John IV. In the meanwhile the Dutch made successful inroads upon the Spanish-Portuguese colonial establishments. Portugal was no longer a power in the East but it extended away over vast regions in South America and over a great stretch of coast in Africa. On the invasion of the French in 1807 the royal family with drew from Portugal to Brazil. The people rose against the French in 1808 and the arms of Britain soon drove out the invaders. In 1822 Brazil separated itself from Portugal and constituted itself an empire. Portugal was then reduced to a mere shadow of what it had been as a colonial power.

It is flat and swampy on the coasts rising to a forest-covered interior with the Namuli mountains (7500 feet) the Serra da Gorongosa and the Mantia plateau as some of the loftiest elevations. It is intersected by the Limpopo, Zambezi and other rivers. The climate is unhealthy the mean temperature being 70°-75°. Agriculture is largely practised by the natives (Bantu) who raise large crops of maize. Other products are cotton, palm-nuts and oil rebbas, ivory, indigo gum, wax, coffee, tobacco, and sugar all of which are exported. Gold and coal are worked to some extent. The railway system (the Delagoa Bay and Beira railways) aggregates 279 miles telegraph (in 1903) 2308 miles. The region contains the ports of Mozambique, the Quilimane, Chinde, Beira, Inhambane, and Lourenço Marques the last-named being the seat of government. Pop. estimated at 2,120,000.

It abounds in lakes, the largest of which is the Goplesee on the F. border. Marshy and sandy tracts occur in various parts and there are extensive forests of conifers. Posen is essentially an agricultural region. The holdings as in the case of the province of Pomerania, are, on an average, very large. The soil yields bountiful crops of cereals, rye being exported in large quantities. Potatoes and sugar beets are extensively raised. The province is rich in live-stock. The manufacturing industries are limited being confined mainly to distilling, brewing and the manufacture of beet-sugar machinery, wagons, and tobacco. About three-fifths of the inhabitants are Poles (who are Catholics) and nearly two-fifths Germans (mostly Protestants). The Prussian government has recently resorted to arbitrary measures to exalt the German element at the expense of the Polish. The province is divided into the two governmental districts of Posen and Bromberg. Capital Posen. Pop in 1900 1 888 055. Prague, prá g (Bohem Praha Gor Prag prá g L Praga) a city of Austria-Hungary capital of the crown-land of Bohemia, near its centre on both banks of the river Vltava 100 miles NNW of Vienna and 75 miles SSE of Dresden. Lat. of observatory 50° 6' 18" N. lon. 14° 25' 5" E. The river with its numerous bridges and its meadows, is a picturesque feature of the city. The most interesting of the bridges is the medieval Katerbrücke, with two old towers and statues of the saints which has become a place of pilgrimage. Prague consists of 7 distinct sections. On the right bank of the river are the Altstadt, the Josephstadt (or former ghetto) the Neustadt, and the Wschehrad a new quarter. On the left bank are the Klementine, the Hradische (the Kremlin of old Prague) and Holešovice-Buzna, the industrial part of the city. The Altstadt and the Neustadt are the principal seats of commercial activity. Adjoining the city are the large suburbs of Zizkow Königliche Weinberge, Karolinenthal and Smichow all but the last named on the right bank of the Moldau.

The Altstadt is the most interesting part of the city. Clustered about the principal square, the Grouser Ring are the old Hussite church, known as the Týnská in which is the tomb of the astronomer Tycho Brahe the Kinsky palace, with a valuable library and the handsome town hall. Among other noteworthy edifices here are the Klementinský church modelled after St. Peter's in Rome, the magnificent palace of Clam Gallas, the Königshof formerly the palace of the Bohemian kings, the Rudolphinum in Renaissance style, comprising a conservatory of music, a museum of art industries and a splendid picture-gallery the old university buildings (Carolinum) and the Pulver turn (powder tower) a relic of the Middle Ages. The most interesting features of the Josephstadt are still the Jewish synagogue dating from the twelfth century and the ancient Jewish burial ground. The Hradische contains the interesting old royal palace (Hofburg). The demonstration of the imperial councillors from its old council chamber was the initial act of the Thirty Years War. The most interesting edifices in the Hradische is the venerable cathedral of St. Vit, containing a marble mausoleum of the Boheman king, the richly decorated chapel of St. Venceslas, and a silver monument to St. John Nepomuk. Other notable structures in this section are the Proconstrateman Abbey of Strahov containing a valuable picture-gallery and a fine library, the Capuchin monastery, and the Belvedere, a palace erected by King Ferdinand I. The quarter of the city called the Kleinecke contains interesting churches and fine palaces, including the palace of Wallenstein, the hall of the Provincial Diet, and the building of the Supreme Court.

Among the architectural features of the Hauptstadt, the largest section of Prague, are the stately Czech (Bohemian) national theatre, the new German theatre, the Bohemian national museum, the town hall of the Neustadt (now used for courts of justice), several notable churches, and some of the university buildings. Prague is embellished with a number of fine sculptural monuments. Foremost among the educational institutions of Prague is the university comprising two distinct institutions, a German university and a modern Czech university. In 1348 the German Emperor Charles IV. who was also king of Bohemia, founded the University of Prague, then the only institution of the kind within the limits of the German Empire. It soon acquired world-wide fame. In 1882 a Czech university was established by the side of the German one. The Czech university in 1901 had over 3500 students and the German about 1500. The library of the German university contains nearly 300 000 volumes. The city possesses a royal German and a royal Bohemian polytechnic institute, a school of art, a conservatory of music, and a municipal museum. Prague is the seat of distinguished learned societies. The city is after Vienna, the largest industrial centre of Austria-Hungary. Most of the manufacturing is done in the suburbs. The products include engines, machinery and miscellaneous metallic wares, leather railway cars, gloves, chemicals, cotton goods, liqueurs, articles of underwear, furniture, gold- and silver-ware, carriages, etc. Brewing and milking are carried on extensively and there are numerous printing and lithographic establishments. The city is the principal commercial emporium of the crownland, being a great railway centre and having the advantages of water transit on the Moldau. Pop. in 1880 170 521, in 1890 182,530, in 1900 294,493. The Czech population is estimated at about 87 per cent. of the total. The victory of the Catholics over the Protestants at Prague (battle of the White Mountain) in 1620 put an end to the brief reign of Frederick of the Palatinate in Bohemia. Frederick the Great achieved a victory here in 1757. The peace of Prague terminated the war between Prussia and Austria in 1800.

It is washed by the gulf on the N and separated by Northumberland Strait from New Brunswick on the W and Nova Scotia on the S. Greatest length, 145 miles; breadth 34 miles. In its narrowest part, near the centre, it is only 4 miles wide. Area, 2134 sq m. The coast-line presents a succession of large bays and projecting headlands, the largest of the former being Beilwood co the N. Remont on the SW. Illsborough on the S., and Cardigan on the E. These bays penetrating the land from opposite directions, form isthmuses which make a division of the island into 3 distinct peninsulas. This natural division has been adopted as the basis of a nearly corresponding civil division into the counties of Queens, Kings and Prince. The inhabitants consist of descendants of Scottish Irish, Acadian, French English, and other settlers, about one-half being of Scottish descent. The Lord Bishop of Nova Scotia exercises Anglican episcopal authority over the island and the Bishop of Charlottetown the Roman Catholic authority.

The surface of Prince Edward Island undulates gently, nowhere becoming mountainous or monotonously flat, and nowhere attaining a greater elevation than 500 feet. At one time it was covered with a dense forest of beech birch, maple, poplar spruce fir hemlock larch and cedar and a considerable part of the original forest still remains. The soil is very fertile and well adapted to agricultural pursuits. No minerals of commercial value have yet been discovered. The climate is much milder than that of the adjoining continent, and the air generally free from fogs. The winter is long and cold but the summer is eminently fitted to promote the growth and maturity of all the ordinary cereals. The principal crops are potatoes and oats, but wheat, barley, peas beans turnips, etc. are also extensively cultivated. The fisheries are very valuable, lobster fishing taking the lead. The oyster beds yield about one-half of the oysters collected in all Canada. The mackerel and cod frequent more particularly the V coast. The manufacturers are chiefly for domestic use. Ship building is prosecuted with enterprise.

Navigation to and from the island generally closes about the middle of December and is resumed about the end of April or beginning of May. During this time mails and passengers are conveyed across the Strait in ice-boats, which ply between Cape L'Anse-au-Loup in Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine in New Brunswick. A railroad extends from Chatham to Georgetown (147 miles) with branches from Chatham to Tignish (18 miles) and from Mount Stewart to Souris 40 miles.

The public affairs of Prince Edward Island are administered by a lieutenant governor and a legislative assembly of 30 representatives. Justice is administered according to the laws of England. The total population of the island in 1891 was 109 088. In 1901 103 259. Capital Charlottetown.

This island after having been a possession of France, passed into the hands of the English in 1703. It was at first placed under the government of Nova Scotia, but in 1766 it was erected into a separate province. In 1799 the name of the island was changed from St John to Prince Edward. In 1873 it was admitted into the Dominion of Canada.

The population now (1905) is about 37,000,000. In 1816 Prussia (with an area about one-fifth less than at present) contained 10,340,000 inhabitants. In 1852 (with a slight increase of area through the annexation of Hohenzollern) 10,935,000. In 1861 18,491,000. In 1867 (within the present limits Schleswig-Holstein Hanover Nassau Hesse-Cassel Frankfurt, and Hesse-Homburg having been annexed) 23,971,000.

Surface Soil Climate.—The surface of Prussia is in the main a great plain sloping gradually toward the North Sea and the Baltic. The shores of these seas are generally very low. In some places, however, as in the enclosed island of Rügen and in the deeply indented coast of Schleswig-Holstein the land rises steeply from the Baltic. Parts of the coast present high sand dunes, and many stretches have to be protected against the sea by artificial dikes. The principal indentations along the Baltic are constituted by the Gulf of Danzig the Pomeranian Gulf and the Bay of Kiel. A peculiar feature of the Baltic coast-land consists in the extensive lagoons separated from the open sea by long spits of land or by islands. There are 3 of these enclosed bays—the Kurisches Haff Frisches Haff and Stettiner Haff. These lagoons receive the waters of the large streams that flow through Prussia to the Baltic. The principal islands of Prussia are Rügen Usedom Wollin Fehmarn and Aßen in the Baltic and the North Frisian Islands in the North Sea. About one-third of the territory of Prussia is mountainous or hilly. In the SE in Silesia, on the borders of Austria-Hungary are the Sudetic Mountains of which the principal portion is the Riesengebirge (Giant Mountains) whose loftiest peak the Schneekoppe (5260 feet) is in Prussia. In the western half of the monarchy are the Harz Mountains (about one-half of which region belongs to Prussia) part of the Thuringian Forest, and an extensive region of mountains and plateaus on both sides of the Rhine, including the Hunsrück Eifel Taunus, Westerwald, etc. The detached Hohenollern belongs mainly to the region of the Rauthe Alb. The eastern provinces belong to the basin of the Baltic, in which the chief rivers (proceeding from E to W) are the Memel (or Niemen), Prage, Vistula, and Oder (with its affluent the Warthe). The western provinces belong to the basin of the North Sea and are watered by the Rbe (with its tributaries the Saale, Havel and Spree), the Weser, Rhine, Eider and Rhine (with its affluents the Main, Lehn, Moselle, Ruhr and Lippe). The level region which constitutes the eastern half of the kingdom is dotted with lakes, none of which is of great size. Among the largest are the Spirdingsee, Menersee, and Geeserichsee. The various parts of Prussia present a great diversity of soil. In the N. by the side of fine farming land there are extensive sandy tracts and large stretches of moor heath and marsh-land. Among these sterile tracts may be mentioned the Lucheler Heide (Tuchel Heath) W. of the Vistula, a great expanse of sand partly overgrown with conifers and the Lüneburger Heide (Lüneburg Heath) an extensive moorland in Hanover. With the expenditure of great toil much of this naturally unproductive soil is being gradually reclaimed. The provinces of Brandenburg in which the capital is situated is in great part a sandy plain much of which has been laboriously brought under cultivation. Among the fertile tracts are portions of the Vistula and Oder valleys, the district about Magdeburg (on the Elbe), the region along the foot of the Liegnitz (in Silesia), the Thuringian country, part of the Weser valley (about Hildesheim), and the mountainous regions along the Rhine and its affluents. The climate of Prussia is on the whole, temperate and salubrious, although rather cold in the N. and in the elevated parts of the W. The mean annual temperature in the eastern part of the Baltic region is about 44° and in the valley of the Rhine about 56°. In the former territory the average winter temperature is about 23°. In the district about the junction of the Rhine and Moselle it is about 15° higher. The rainfall varies very greatly in the different parts of the country. The annual precipitation in the Harz Mountains is as high as 56 inches. In the Rhenish region it is about 34 inches. Along the sea-coast it ranges between 20 and 30 inches. In some of the northern districts it is less than 15 inches.

Agriculture.—About one-half of the surface of Prussia is cleared as agricultural land, about one-seventh is in meadows and pastures, nearly one-fourth is woodland. Somewhat more than one-half of the land under cultivation is devoted to cereal crops. The chief cereals in the order of the acreage (as well as of the production) are rye, oats, wheat, and barley. Potatoes and beets (for sugar) are raised in immense quantities. The wines of the Rhine and Moselle are famous. Fruit-culture is very extensive. The livestock in the enumeration of 1900 consisted mainly of 19,877,000 cattle, 2,924,000 horses, 7,001,500 sheep, 19,987,000 pigs, and 2,051,500 goats. Bee-keeping is a considerable industry. The products of the horn yard are not sufficient for home consumption, great quantities of poultry, feathers and eggs being imported. In some provinces of Prussia (in Pomerania, Posen, West Prussia) agriculture is carried on almost exclusively on large estates.

Forests.—There are about 30,000,000 acres of woodland in Prussia, of which somewhat more than 50 per cent. belongs to private individuals, 31 per cent. to the state and 13 per cent. to the communes. The greatest extent of forest-land is in the province of Posen, where it covers about 40 per cent. of the area. In Brandenburg one-third of the surface is woodland and the Rhine-land is nearly as well wooded. Silesia and Westphalia are not far behind the Rhine-land. The smallest proportion of forest area is in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, where it is only about 7 per cent. Somewhat more than two-thirds of the forest area consists of conifers. Game-abounds, the quadrupeds comprising deer, hares, rabbits, wild boars, foxes and wild-cats besides smaller mammals. Feathered game is varied and plentiful. In spite of the extensive settlements and the many rivers and lakes the fisheries of Prussia are far from supplying the needs of the inhabitants.

Mineral Products.—Prussia holds the leading place among the countries of continental Europe in the extent of its mineral resources. The value of the mineral products in 1901 was $287,000,000. The leading product is coal. The quantity mined in 1901 was 101,000,000 metric (approximately long) tons, valued at $231,000,000. The coal regions are the Rhine-land, Westphalia, Hanover, Saxony and Silesia. Brown coal (lignite) is also found in vast deposits, especially in Saxony, Brandenburg, Silesia, the Rhine-land and Posen. The yield in 1901 was 37,600,000 tons, valued at $22,000,000.

Prussia is a great iron-producing country. The deposits occur mainly in the regions which yield the bulk of the coal supply. The iron-ore mined in 1901 amounted to 2,832,000 tons, valued at nearly $10,000,000. Copper (mainly in Saxony) and zinc (mainly in Silesia) were mined in that year to the extent of 765,000 tons (valued at nearly $6,000,000) and 644,500 tons (about $5,000,000) respectively. Large quantities of lead are obtained in the Rhine-land, Silesia, Posen-Nassau, and Hanover. Other metallic products are silver, gold, cobalt, nickel, arsenic, manganese, and pyrite. Prussia possesses vast riches in various kinds of salts, including common salt, kainite, chloride of potassium and other potassium salts, Glauber salt, etc. The town of Stassfurt in the province of Saxony, is noted for the great deposits of rock salt and kainite in its vicinity. The product of salts in 1901 was valued at about $17,000,000. Amber is found along the shores of the Baltic. Prussia has a number of noted mineral springs, among which are those at Homburg, Wiesbaden, Ems, Soden, Bad Langensalza, Homburg, Soden, Aix-la-Chapelle, Warmbrunn and Bad Salzhungen.

Manufactures and Internal Communications, etc.—Prussia ranks next to England among the states of Europe in the extent of its iron and steel industry. The production of raw iron and steel is carried on mainly in the Rhine-land, Westphalia, and Silesia. More than 5,000,000 tons of pig iron were produced in 1901. The Rhine-land and Westphalia are among the most important seats of the manufacture of iron and steel in the world. The leading centres of this industry in Prussia are located at the Krupp works and at the steel works of Remscheid and Solingen. Berlin and other large cities have great locomotive and engine works and machine-shops. Stettin has become one of the principal seats of the ship-building industry in the world. Prussia occupies a commanding position in the textile industry which is carried on most extensively in the Rhine-land, Westphalia, and Silesia. Aix-la-Chapelle is noted for its woollen stuffs, and Bielefeld (in Westphalia) for its linen. While Krefeld and Bielefeld are great centres of the silk manufacture, Berlin is especially prominent in the manufacture of clothing, furniture, electrical apparatus, ornamental metalwork and surgical and physical instruments. Among other important manufactures of the country are beet-sugar and other food products, porcelain, glass, paper, leather goods, beer and chemicals. Berlin now vies with Leipzig as a book publishing centre.

The Prussian government has displayed great activity in developing the internal water communications of the country. The length of canals and canalised water-courses nearly equals that of the navigable waterways afforded by the rivers without artificial aid. There were in 1903 nearly 22,000 miles of railway in the kingdom of which about 20,000 miles belonged to the state, the remainder being the property of private individuals. Among the leading commercial centres are Berlin, Königsberg, Danzig, Stettin, Posen, Breslau, Magdeburg, Hanover, Altona, Frankfurt-on-the-Main, Leipzig, Elberfeld-Barmen, Krefeld, and Frankfurt-on-the-Oder. Ports still play an important part in the trade of the country. The principal ports of Prussia are Stettin, Danzig, Königsberg, Memel and Altona. The bulk of the sea trade of the country passes through Hamburg and Bremen.

Population.—Of the total population of Prussia in 1900 (on round numbers 34,500,000) about 30,400,000 were German speaking. The largest non-German element is the Polish which numbers more than 3,000,000 people dwelling mainly in Posen (where they are most numerous), Silesia, East Prussia and West Prussia. There are besides about 400,000 Slavs comprising Maxara (East Prussia), Kouraks (West Prussia) and Pomerania, Czechs (Silesia), and Wends (Brandenburg and Silesia). There are about 100,000 Lithuanians in East Prussia. Schleswig-Holstein contains upward of 125,000 Danes. The Dutch number about 5,000 and there are considerable numbers of Frisians and Wallons. Of the total population in 1900 21,800,000 were Protestants, 12,100,000 Catholics and nearly 400,000 Jews. The Catholics predominate numerically in the Rhine-land, Hohenlohe, Posen, Silesia, Westphalia and West Prussia. The Protestant church in Prussia outside of the provinces annexed in 1866 is under the Evangelical High Consistory at Berlin. In the new provinces it is under the ministry of public worship. Prussia has 9 universities as follows: Berlin, Breslau, Bonn, Göttingen, Halle, Königsberg, Göttingen, Marburg, Kiel.

Constitution.—Prussia is a constitutional monarchy the crown being hereditary in the male line. The parliament, or diet (Landtag) is composed of 2 chambers: the house of lords (Herrenhaus) and the chamber of deputies (Abgeordnetenhaus). The house of lords is composed of the princes of the royal family, the heads of the hereditary noble houses, a number of life peers (chosen by the king from among the rich landowners, prominent manufacturers, and other nobles), representatives of universities, the burgomasters of the large cities, and others. The chamber of deputies, or lower house, consists of 433 members chosen for a term of 5 years by indirect election the indirect voters being divided into 3 classes, the respective categories representing varying voting powers, dependent upon the amount of direct taxes paid by the voters. By the constitution of the German Empire the king of Prussia is German Emperor. Prussia is entitled to 17 votes in the Bundesrat out of a total of 58 and has 276 deputies in the Reichstag out of a total of 397. The kingdom is divided into provinces each under a governor (Oberpräsident). The provinces are divided into government-districts and these again into circles. The capital of the country is Berlin. The highest court for the kingdom is the Imperial Supreme Court at Leipzig.

History.—The nucleus of the Prussian kingdom is Brandenburg (See BRANDENBURG). The country takes its name from the Prussians (Barbarians) a people akin to the Lithuanians who have been long extinct. In the thirteenth century the heathen Prussians whose home was on the Baltic Sea, in the region comprised in the modern provinces of East and West Prussia were conquered by the crusading Teutonic Knights who spread Christianity with fire and sword. They Germanized the subjugated country and built cities. They were joined by the Knights Swordbearers, and the eastern shore of the Baltic Sea as far as the Gulf of Finland was subjected by its Germanic invaders. In 1466 the Teutonic Knights were forced to surrender West Prussia to Poland. East Prussia remaining in their hands as a Polish fief. About half a century later the Knights Swordbearers cut loose from the Teutonic Knights. In 1525 the grand master of the Teutonic Knights, Albert of Brandenburg converted their state into a Protestant hereditary realm the duchy of Prussia, for which he did homage to the king of Poland. In 1618 the duchy of Prussia was united with the electorates of Brandenburg. It continued to be outside of the bounds of the German Empire. In 1637 Frederick William, the 'Great Elector' of Brandenburg secured from Poland a recognition of its suzerainty over Prussia. Under the prince Brandenburg rose to the position of a considerable military power. His successor Frederick III. assumed in 1701 the title of King of Prussia, styling himself Frederick I. When Frederick the Great ascended the throne in 1740 the Prussian dominions had an area of about 48,000 sq m (about equal to that of the state of New York) with about 2,350,000 inhabitants. They embraced Brandenburg, East Prussia, the greater part of Pomerania, part of the present province of Saxony, the duchy of Cleves, the co. of Marb. the co. of Ravensburg (Westphalia) etc. Frederick the Great wrested the greater part of Silesia from Austria in 1742. He took part in the first partition of Poland in 1772 and thus acquired West Prussia (without Danzig and Thorn) and other territories. In his reign which terminated in 1796 the area of Prussia was increased by two-thirds and its population rose to nearly 5,500,000. The dismemberment of the kingdom of Poland, in 1793 and 1795 vastly increased the area of Prussia. The Polish capital Warsaw became for a short time a Prussian city. By the treaty of Tilsit, which terminated the disastrous war with Napoleon waged in 1806-07 Prussia was deprived of all her possessions W of the Elbe and of the greater part of Prussian Poland, but in 1815 after the fall of Napoleon the Congress of Vienna restored to her most of the old possessions which had been wrested from her by the French (not reckoning the later Polish acquisitions) and granted to her new lands in many parts of Germany including half of Saxony. The kingdom had now an area of 107,000 sq m and a population of about 10,000,000.

In 1866 after the successful war against Austria, Prussia was enlarged by the annexation of the kingdom of Hanover the electorate of Hesse-Cassel the duchy of Nassau, Frankfurt, Hesse-Homburg, Schleswig-Holstein and Lauenburg. In that year Prussia organized the North German Confederation. On Jan 18 1871 William I of Prussia was proclaimed at Versailles Deutscher Kaiser or German emperor. See GERMANY.

Punjab, Pán-jáb, pán-jáh' or Pun'yab' (i.e. land of the five rivers, —Sutlej, Beas, Chenab, Jhelum, Ravi) a province in the NW part of British India, bounded on the N. by the Northwest Frontier Province and Kashmir on the E. by Tibet and the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh on the S. by Rajputana, on the SW. by Sind and on the W. by Beluchistan and the Northwest Frontier Province. Area, 133,741 sq. m. of which 97,309 sq. m. are directly under British control and 35,532 sq. m. are feudatory native states. It lies between the parallels of 28° and 34° N. lat. The Punjab is mainly in the basin of the Indus which forms part of the W. boundary and which near the SW. end of the region receives the Poonind (five rivers) a short stream formed by the union of the Sutlej (whose chief affluent is the Beas) and the Chenab (which receives the Jhelum and the Ravi). The course of these rivers is from NE to SW. The NE portion belongs to the basin of the Ganges, the Jumea flowing along the E. boundary. The extreme N. part of the Punjab belongs to the region of the Himalayas, but the bulk of the country consists of great plains which are clad with scanty vegetation and in parts are entirely arid. While the Indus leaves the Punjab the surface is but little elevated above the sea. The Punjab has in the main a fertile soil but except in the N. the rainfall is very scanty so that agriculture can be carried on only in the river valleys and in places watered by irrigation-canals or where irrigation by means of wells is practicable. The area artificially irrigated is very extensive and is being enlarged through great government works. The heat of the summer in the plains is tropical. The Punjab produces large crops of wheat, rice and other grains, pulses, and oil-seeds. Among other products are sugar cane, cotton, tea, and indigo. The Punjab is the greatest wheat-producing region of India, large quantities of the cereal being shipped from Karachi in India. Extensive areas in the S. and E. are unproductive. Great numbers of cattle, buffaloes, sheep and goats are reared. Camels are extensively used. Large quantities of salt are obtained from the Salt Range between the Indus and Jhelum rivers. The manufactures are almost entirely confined to house industries, cotton weaving occupying the first place.

More than one-fourth of the area of the Punjab is comprised in the native states of which there are about 40 the largest being Bahawalpur, Patiala and Chamba. Its province is administered by a lieutenant governor who is appointed by the governor general of India. The population within the present limits (a strip of the Punjab was set off in the S. section of the Northwest Frontier Province in 1901) numbered in 1901 24,354,151 of which 4,439,800 belonged to the native states. The inhabitants of the Punjab comprise a medley of tribes and classes the most prominent nationality being that of the Jats. The bulk of the people speak Punjabi, a modern Hindi dialect. About one-half of the inhabitants are Mohammedans and about five-sixths of the remainder Hindus. The most interesting element in the population is the religious sect (monitored by the events of their history into a nationality) of the Sikhs. It arose at the beginning of the sixteenth century and developed into a powerful military community the tenets of the sect inculcating martial virtues along with monotheism and a well-ordered life. Their Bible is the Adi-Granth and their holy city is Amritsar. The Sikhs, whose blood in the main is that of the Jats, number upward of 2,000,000. The Sikh state reached a great height of power under Runjit Singh (died 1839) who ruled Kashmir as well as the Punjab. The native dynasties of the Punjab are in part Hindu in part Sikh and in part Mohammedan. The largest cities are Delhi, Lahore, Amritsar, Rawalpindi, Multan and Umballa. Capital, Lahore. The two wars waged by the British against the Sikhs in 1845-46 and 1848-49 brought the Punjab under their sway.

Pyrenees, pür-ga-ne (Fr. Pyrenées, pür'ri né; Sp. Pirineos, pür-ri-né; Gr. Pyrenæ, pür-ri-né; L. Pyrenæ), a mountain chain, generally linked with the Alps system, forming the boundary between France and Spain and about ing with one extremity on the Mediterranean Sea and with the other on the Atlantic Ocean. An almost direct westerly continuation is constituted by the Cantabrian Mountains, which extend along the Biscayan border of the Iberian Peninsula. The length of the Pyrenees proper, from Cape Cruz (Cabo de Cruz) on the E. to Formentor on the W. is about 370 miles. The system is composed of two or more nearly parallel ridges, which in their widest part have a collective development of about 90 miles and which near the centre become united by means of a remarkable rectangular spur, in which some of the loftiest summits are found. The descent on the S. side is much more abrupt than on the N. and this fact far surpasses the opposite in the boldness and grandeur of its scenery. Geographers frequently recognize as divisions of the system the Central Pyrenees forming the main mass of the chain and included between the Col de la Perche and the Pic des Basques, and the Eastern and Western Pyrenees, lying respectively to the E. and W. of these points. The loftiest summits are nearly all in the central section. In the W. the crest line falls to 5600-6000 feet while in the E. and centre it is maintained between 7000 and 8000 ft. Although eminently beautiful in their scenic features, the Pyrenees do not, as a rule, present the abrupt outlines of the Alps of Switzerland and there are few summits that can properly be designated arêtes or that recall the sharply serrate or penetrating Hirner. The numerous deep-lying and hospitable valleys of the Alps are also wanting, and lakes, while they are fairly numerous are mostly of small size and hardly more than glacial tarns. The region gives evidence of extensive past glaciation but the existing glaciers are all of small size and to be found only on the higher summits they descend to a level of about 7200 ft. The snow line lies at a height of 8200-9000 ft. A large part of the Pyrenean region, especially on the side of Spain, is one of barren and desolate severity with out relief in forest or meadow lands; but where, more particularly in the western sections, the rainfall is sufficiently generous and the slopes are not too abrupt, a vigorous vegetation clothes the valleys and mountains alike. The more distinctive forest trees are the conifers, the oak and beech with the chestnut in the E. Excepting the evergreens, trees are but rarely met with above an altitude of 5500-5800 ft. Grass is grown in some of the upper valleys and corn is cultivated even at heights of 3000-3500 ft. The wild animals include the bear, wolf, lynx, wild-cat, wild-boar, deer, chamois, and ibex and many of the larger rapacious and gallinaceous birds. The mineral wealth of the Pyrenees, except in deposits of zinc and lead-ores would seem to be limited. In their geological construction the mountains present a central or nuclear mass of granitic rocks, to which are added on the flanks the more recent strata up to the Middle Tertiary when the final upheaval of the system appears to have been accomplished.

The chief rivers rising in the Pyrenees are the Adour, Garonne, and Arns, flowing N., and the Llobregat and numerous affluents of the Ebro (Arçan Noguer, Segre) flowing S. A distinctive feature of the upper valleys of the minor streams is their termination in cirques (or amphitheatres) such as those of Gavarnie and Troumouse, noted for their magnificent scenery. Into some of these cirques cascades descend from immense heights. The passes of the Pyrenees are sufficiently numerous, but there are few that are available for vehicles. Such are the passes of the Col de Portus (Perthus) on the route from Perpignan, France, to Figueras traversed by Hannibal in 218 B.C. the Col de la Perche, on the road from Prades to Pau, and the Col de Batale (3860 feet), on the road from Bayonne to Perpignan, which connects with the famous pass of Nivelle.

Among the loftiest summits of the Pyrenees are the Maladeta (Pic Nethon, Pic de Aneto), the culminating point, 11,155 feet. Mont Perdu, 10,894 ft. Pic d'Estats 10,806 ft.; Pic de Montanin, 10,168 ft. Pic de Vignemale, 10,792 ft. Pic d'Os, 10,220 ft. Pic de Maupas, 10,200 ft.; and Puigmal, 9641 ft.,—all of these situated on the central or dividing crest, Pic Long 10,478 ft., and Canigou, 9137 ft., entirely on French territory; and Pic des Possets 11,046 ft. in Spain. The Pyrenees abound in thermal and mineral springs and are much visited for the relief which these afford. Among the most noted of the resorts lying within or close to the foot of the mountains are Pau, Tarbes, Bagneres-de-Bigorre, Bagnères-de-Luchon, Pierrefitte, Bagnères, Cauterets, Lux, Gavarnie, Lourdes, and Amalieu-Balm.—The peace of the Pyrenees, a treaty concluded between France and Spain in 1659 was signed on an islet in the little river Bidassoa, which rises in the Pyrenees near their western end and enters the Bay of Biscay. By its terms Louis XIV was secured in the possession of part of the Netherlands and of Roussillon.

Quebec, kwé-bék (Fr. Québec, ká bék') a city and port, and, after Montreal, Toronto, the most populous city in the Dominion of Canada, capital of the province of Quebec. It is situated on the left bank of the river St. Lawrence (which here receives the St. Charles), 400 miles from its mouth and 180 miles (by water) NE. of Montreal on the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk and other railroads. Lat. of observatory 46° 48' N. lon. 71° 13' 0' W. Mean temperature of winter 16° of centigrade 68°; mean of the year 59°. The city has a remarkably picturesque situation between the two rivers, at the NE extremity of an elevated table-land which forms the left bank of the St. Lawrence. Cape Diamond, the extremity of the table-land rises to nearly 250 feet above the level of the river to which it presents an almost precipitous face. Quebec has to a great extent the aspect of a quaint European city. It is divided into two parts called the Upper and the Lower Town the more ancient portion of the former being still enclosed by walls. St. John St. Louis St. Sauveur and St. Roch are thriving suburbs. The upper town occupies the highest part of the promontory and is fortified having an ancient citadel which crowns the summit of Cape Diamond and covers with its numerous works an area of 40 acres. From its position it is probably the strongest fortress in America. Adjoining it is the Dufferin Terrace, a huge wooden platform erected on the edge of the cliff 185 feet above the lower town and measuring 1 mile in length. On it is a statue to Champlain erected in 1908. The lower town, which is the seat of commerce is built around the base of Cape Diamond, where in many places the rock has been cut away to make room for the houses. The backs of both rivers are lined with warehouses and wharves. The streets are generally irregular and narrow. One of the busiest is St. Peter Street, near the termination of which are the custom house and the Louis Rame with wet- and tidal-docks covering 60 acres.

In the upper town are several squares and public walks (Esplanade, Grande Allée) commanding views of varied and picturesque beauty. In the Governor's Garden is a monument to general Wolfe and Montcalm the English and French commanders who fell at the taking of Quebec to 1759. A monument 40 feet in height marks the spot where General Wolfe fell on the Plains of Abraham.

Among the more noted public buildings of the city may be mentioned the Parliament and Departmental buildings (1878-82) the city hall (1894-95) the Basilica (Roman Catholic cathedral) the Hôtel Dieu Convent and Hospital Anglican cathedral archbishop's palace, church of Notre Dame des Victoires, and Champlain Market. The educational institutions comprise Laval University with faculties of theology law medicine, and arts, and with an attendance in 1904-05 of 358 the Seminary of Quebec the Ursuline Convent (with buildings dating from 1695) Morrin College Laval Normal and Model School and other academic institutions. There are in addition the Canadian and Mechanics institutes the Literary and Historical Society founded in 1924, and possessing valuable records and a large collection of historical manuscripts and St. Patrick's Literary Institute. The principal benevolent institutions are the Marine Hospital the Hôtel Dieu (already referred to) the general hospital the lunatic asylum at Beauport, etc.

The great staple of export is timber which was formerly rafted either but which is now transported by the railroads and collected into coes which extend along the left bank of the St. Lawrence for a distance of several miles above the town. Quebec also exports large quantities of grain and cattle. The manufactures, especially of leather and cotton, are of considerable importance. The city may be reached by the largest ocean steamers and has many direct lines of steam communication with European and other ports. The port is closed by ice ordinarily from the middle of December to the end of April. Ferries connect Quebec with Lévis, on the opposite side of the St. Lawrence.

Quebec is the seat of a bishop of the Church of England and of an archbishop of the Church of Rome. Pop. in 1535, 27 562 in 1553, 42,062 in 1871 60 690, in 1881 62,444 in 1891 63,090 in 1901 68,840. About five-sixths of the inhabitants are French and Roman Catholics.

When Jacques Cartier sailed up the St. Lawrence in 1535 he found an Indian village called Stadacona where Quebec now stands. In 1608 the French explorer Champlain founded the city, giving it its present name. In 1609 it fell into the hands of the English, but, with the whole of Canada, was restored to the French in 1632, and in 1662, when the colony was made a royal government, it became the capital. In 1698 and again in 1711 the English attempted to capture it, but met with defeat; but in 1760 it was taken by the forces of Wolfe and from that time it remained permanently in the hands of the British. An unsuccessful attempt was made by the Americans to carry the city by assault on the night of Dec 31 1775, when General Montgomery was slain.

Quebec, a province of the Dominion of Canada, partly in the peninsula of Labrador and bounded on the N by Ungava and Hudson Bay on the E by Newfoundland-Labrador and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on the S by the Bay of Chaleur, New Brunswick, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York and on the SW and W by the province of Ontario, from which it is in part separated by the Ottawa River. The N boundary is in greater part constituted by the East Main and Hamilton rivers. Lakes Abitibi and Temiscamingue are on the W boundary. Area of the land-surface, 341 760 sq m of the water, exclusive of the St. Lawrence 2900 sq m.

The principal mountain ranges consist of the Notre Dame (or Green) Mountains, which from the latitude of the city of Quebec, follow nearly the whole course of the St. Lawrence on its S side, and terminate on the gulf of the same name, between the Bay of Chaleur and Gaspé Point. They are largely to the form of plateau ridges and highlands, giving much pasture and grazing land and rising to elevations of 2600 to 4000 feet (Benton Mountains). The average elevation of the Gaspé Peninsula is about 3000 ft. On the N side of the river is the Laurentian Range (or Laurentides) about 1600-1800 ft. In elevation also in great part table-land and rising in Cape Tourmente to 1900 ft. In the Aboliments to 2547 ft and in Tremblant Mountain N of Montreal to nearly 2400 ft. The great central plain at the gateway of which stands the city of Quebec, only exceptionally attains an elevation of 300 ft above sea-level. It covers an area of about 16 000 sq in. The rivers of the province are the Ottawa, East Main and Hamilton already referred to the Rupert River (which flows westward into James Bay) the St. Lawrence, and a number of streams that are tributary to it—St. Maurice, Saguenay, Grotto, Manicouagan, Molok, Richelieu, St. Francis, Chaudière, Montgouche, etc. The largest steam craft may ascend the St. Lawrence to Montreal. See ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

The lakes in the region N of the St. Lawrence are exceedingly numerous, and comprise Muskeg which gives outlet to the Rupert River Ashwanipi supplying some of the head-waters to the Hamilton River St. John feeding the Saguenay Fox Lake, Temiscouata, Temiscamingue, and Abitibi. South of the St. Lawrence are Memphrémagog and a small portion of Lake Champlain.

The climate of Quebec, though similar to that of Ontario, is colder in winter and warmer in summer. Spring bursts forth in great beauty and vegetation is rapid. In winter the cold is generally steady and the atmosphere is clear and bracing. Winter usually commences towards the end of November and lasts until the end of March. The soil is in many districts rich and adapted to the growth of cereals. All the ordinary crops (wheat, oats, barley, rye, corn, potatoes, etc.) are produced and fruits (apples, plums, cherry, pear) grow in abundance. The dairy industry has attained great dimensions. The greater part of the province is covered with forests, consisting chiefly of white and red pine. The other kinds of timber are ash, birch, beech, elm, hickory, black walnut, maple, cherry, better nut, basswood, spruce, fir, etc. Among the minerals, copper, iron and gold are worked to some extent. Asbestos is obtained in large quantities in the eastern sections. Mica, graphite, and apatite are among the other useful minerals. The value of the fisheries in 1902 was $2,069 307.

The public affairs of the province are administered by a lieutenant-governor assisted by a legislative council of 24 members appointed for life, and a legislative assembly of 74 members. The capital is Quebec the largest city Montreal. The population in 1901 was 1 643,898. The majority of the inhabitants of the province are descendants of the French who have preserved the French language. The prevailing religion is the Roman Catholic, the adherents of this faith numbering in 1901 1 499 186 those of the Church of England, 81 345. Of the institutions of learning the first place is held by McGill University at Montreal and the second by the University of Laval in the city of Quebec.

The province contains many grand and beautiful objects of interest to the tourist. The Ottawa and its tributaries abound in falls and rapids of an exceedingly picturesque character. There are also the Falls of Montmorency 7 miles NE of Quebec; the Falls of the Chaudière, on the E side of the St. Lawrence, 16 miles above Quebec; the Falls of the St. Anna, on the N shore of the St. Lawrence, 22 miles below Quebec; and the Long Sault, Gaspé, and Lac Beauport, all on a favorite route of tourists. But the grandest scenery is to be seen on the Saguenay River, a northern tributary of the St. Lawrence.

In 1791 Canada (which had come into possession of England in 1760-63) was divided into Upper and Lower Canada (now Ontario and Quebec). In 1841 the two provinces were reunited. In 1867 they were again separated, under the names respectively of Ontario and Quebec.

Queensland, a state of Australia, occupying almost the whole of the N.E. part of that continent E. of lon. 135° E. and V. of lat. 28° S., and comprising the adjacent islands of the Pacific Ocean and the Gulf of Carpentaria. It is bounded on the S. and W. by New South Wales, South Australia, and the Northern Territory of South Australia. The long Cape York Peninsula in the N. approaches to within about 100 miles of Papua from which it is separated by Torres Strait. The Moreton Bay district was known for many years as the N. part of New South Wales and was a penal settlement till 1842. Area, 668,497 sq. m. Pop. in 1901 562,204. A large part of the coast is shut off from the open sea by the Great Barrier Reef which lies off the land at a distance of from 20 to 90 miles. The seaboard is 2350 miles in extent and well suited for commerce, having many noble bays, among which are Moreton Bay, Wide Bay, Kersey Bay, Port Curtis, Keppel Bay, Shoalwater Bay, Broad Sound, and Rosalie, Bowling Green, Halifax, Beekingham Trinity, and Princess Charlotte bays. Ranges of mountains which form part of the great Australian border-system of elevations, run parallel with the E. coast at a distance of 30 to 70 miles, and give rise to numerous rivers (many of which are navigable) as the Brisbane, Burnett, Fitzroy, Barakulla, Herbert, Normanby, etc. Other ranges, less clearly defined, occupy the interior of the state and determine the watershed for the streams flowing into the Gulf of Carpentaria (Fitzroy, Leichhardt, Gilbert, Mitchell), and for those that take a southerly course (Cooper, Warrego, Dumaresque, Condamine), the majority of which are tributary to the Murray Darling system of waters. The loftiest mountain-summit appears to be one of the Bellenden-Ker peaks (Wooloonoon), NW of Beekingham Bay which is thought to be about 6400 feet in elevation. Mount Dalrymple, lying about 150 miles southward, probably attains 6000 ft. The climate is warm and favorable to European. The N. half of the country is in the torrid zone. The distinguishing feature in the climate of Queensland is the absence of hot winds and the extreme dryness of the atmosphere. Hot days are almost invariably followed by cool nights. The extremes of heat and cold common to other parts of the continent are practically unknown; the temperature rarely rising, even in the hottest and driest parts above 95°. The rainfall varies considerably, the annual precipitation in different parts ranging from 20 inches or less to 100 inches and more in the mountainous tracts. The vegetation of Queensland is a rich and varied one, with a large representation of tropical-forest elements (palms, bamboo, cane, tree-ferns, screw pines, etc.). Excellent timber is supplied by the red-oaks, haemlock, pine, Luehhardt tree, silky-oak, bottle-tree, etc. About one-half of the area is still in natural forest. The banana is thought to be indigenous here. The agricultural crops include rice, tobacco, corn, sugar cane, and indigo. Various fruits are cultivated. The native fauna is of the general Australian type, the mammals being distinctly marsupials (kangaroos, kangaroo-rats, etc.) and bats. The dragon frequents some of the swamps. Among reptiles, the crocodile may be mentioned and among fishes, the lung fish (Arctodus) and barramundi. The mineral wealth of the colony appears to be large and comprises the ores of gold, silver, copper, tin, and manganese together with deposits of coal etc. The product of coal in 1902 was 101,351 tons of gold, 390,433 ounces of silver-ore, 781,252 tons and of tin, 2085 tons.

Queensland is famed for its sheep-walks and cattle-runs, many of them of great extent. In 1902 the live-stock numbered 7,215,945 sheep, 2,443,471 cattle, 399,123 horses and 71,202 pigs. The leading exports of the state in 1902 were apart from metals, wool (valued at £1,311,000), sugar (£255,000), hides and skins, frozen meat, tallow, pearl shell and green fruit. There were in that year 2328 miles of railway open for traffic. The government is vested in a governor, a legislative council, nominated by the crown and a legislative assembly elected by the people. The capital is Brisbane.

Ravenna, ra-vén-ná, a city of Italy capital of a province of its own name, formerly constituting part of the Romagna and now included in the compartimento of Emilia, 6 miles from the Adriatic Sea and 15 miles NE. of Forlì. It is situated in a marshy plain between the river Lamone and the Fiumi Uniti (the united stream of the Roncone and Montone). In ancient times the waters of the Adriatic washed its walls now it is connected with the sea only by a canal. Ravenna presents on the whole a sombre appearance. In the centre of the town is the Piazza Vittorio Emanuele, with two lofty columns erected by the Venetians. There are a number of other squares ornamented with statues. Ravenna is, next to Rome the most important city of Italy in connection with the history of early Christian art of the period from the fifth to the eighth century. Its basilicas and its monuments are eminently illustrative of the transition from the late-Roman to the Byzantine style. Among the most venerable of the ecclesiastical edifices is the cathedral of Sant'Orso, dating from Roman times but in its present form mainly a work of the eighteenth century although parts of the ancient structure have been preserved the octagonal baptistery adjoining the cathedral, with the oldest mosaic in Ravenna (fifth century) the basilica of San Vitale, Sant'Apollinare Nuovo and Sant'Apollinare in Classe, all of the greatest interest in connection with the history of the art of mosaic and the church of San Saverio e Celso originally the mausoleum of Galla Placidia, half-sister of the emperor Honorius, likewise remarkable for its mosaics (fifth century). Among other ancient structures are the tomb of Theodoric the Great, known as the Rotonda built in the form of a deacon and what remains of the palace of that sovereign. The archiepiscopal palace is decorated with fine mosaics. Close to the church of San Francesco is the tomb of Dante. Ravenna possesses an academy of fine arts, a Byzantine museum, municipal collections (housed in the former monastery of Classe) and a large communal library containing some very rare and valuable books and manuscripts. On the outskirts of the city is a column erected to the memory of Garibaldi de Feix who fell here after defeating the Spanish and Papal forces on April 11, 1612.

The industries of Ravenna comprise viniculture, silk-spinning and weaving, and the manufacture of glass and musical instruments. Pop. in 1901 (including the suburbs of San Rocco, San Biagio and Darzens), 23,461 (commune, 64,431).

Ravenna is a very ancient city. It was a great naval station of the Romans under the empire. The emperor Honorius held his court here as did Odoacer the first Germanic king of Italy and after him, Theodoric the Great, king of the Ostrogoths who ruled Italy from 493 to 526. About 540 the city was taken by the Byzantine general Belisarius. Under the Byzantine emperors it was made in 563 the capital of their domain in Italy which was known as the exarchate of Ravenna. In 753 it fell into the hands of the Lombards. Pepin king of the Franks, having vanquished the Lombards, presented Ravenna in 753 to the papal see. In the latter part of the Middle Ages Ravenna was for a time an independent state and then a possession of Venice, from whom it was wrested by the pope in 1509. It remained a papal possession until 1860. In Byzantine times the archbishops of Ravenna for a time asserted their independence of the see of Rome.

Red River of the North, a river of the United States and Canada, rises in two branches—one having its source in Lake Traverse, on the borders of Minnesota and South Dakota, and the other in a small lake in western Minnesota—which unite at Breckenridge, the stream thence flows generally northward and forming the boundary between Minnesota and North Dakota. This northerly course is continued into Manitoba, where (at Winnipeg) the river receives the Assiniboine, and the combined stream then flows to the S. end of Lake Winnipeg. Throughout the major part of its course the river flows through a flat plain, with an average width of 30-35 miles, which is noted for its fertility. The greater part of this plain lies within the region that was formerly occupied by a vast lake, to which geologists have given the name of Lake Agassiz and of which some of the remaining traces are recognized in the lakes of Manitoba. The chief tributaries are the Red Lake, Buffalo, Marsh, Bozeman, Chyenne, and Pembina rivers. The Red River is navigable for steamboats to Fargo. Total length, about 700 miles

Red Sea, or Arabian Gulf (L. Erythraean Mare or Mare Rubrum), an extensive inland sea, communicating with the Indian Ocean (Gulf of Aden) by the Strait of Bah-el-Mandeb, and stretching in a NNW direction between Arabia on the E. and the Egyptian dominions and Eritrea on the W. and separated from the Mediterranean on the N. only by the Isthmus of Suez, which where narrowest, does not exceed 72 miles across. The name Red Sea seems to bear no relation either to the masses of red Por (Tricolodermum erythraeanum) that are a part of the flora of the basin or to the color of the water itself which is blue (appearing green on the coral reefs). The sea forms a very long and comparatively narrow expanse, about 1450 miles in length. The greatest breadth does not exceed 200 miles. At the N. extremity it divides into two branches, one of which, the Gulf of Akabah penetrates N. by E. into Arabia for about 100 miles, with an average breadth of about 12 miles while the other, the Gulf of Suez, follows the general direction of the sea and penetrates between Arabia and Egypt about 200 miles with an average breadth of 20 miles. From this point, through the ship-canal of Suez, its waters communicate with the Mediterranean. In the fork between these two branches is Mount Sinai. The shores, both on the E. and W. are for the most part sandy though sometimes swampy from 10 to 20 miles in width and suddenly terminated by the abutments of table-lands from 3000 to 6000 feet high. The Red Sea is generally considered to occupy the bottom of an immense longitudinal valley or subsided trough of the earth's crust (rift valley) which at one time may have extended quite to the table-lands on either side. This valley would seem to have since been partially filled up by coral growths, which extending in parallel lines at a short distance from either coast, have subdivided the sea into three different channels and have also studded its shores with numerous small islands. Geologists have assumed a distinct relation to exist between the trough of the Red Sea and the subsided rifts which define the positions of the great lakes of eastern Africa. One of its markedly distinctive features is the presence within it of active volcanoes. The depth of the Red Sea is very considerable, averaging it is thought, not less than 1400-1500 ft. Opposite Jidda a ridge or upraised bank over which the water does not exceed 60 fathoms, divides the basin into a northern and a southern half soundings in which have given respectively 1200 and 1100 fathoms (7200 and 7140 ft.) The Gulf of Akabah has a depth of nearly 4000 ft. but the Gulf of Suez is shallow and, perhaps, nowhere attains 200 ft. The evaporation from the surface is very great, 80-90 inches annually and the salinity considerably higher than that of the free ocean. The currents of the sea are almost entirely the result of its prevailing winds. From October to May when the wind blows generally with great constancy from the E. a strong current sets in from the Strait of Bah-el-Mandeb and produces a general rise in the water of about 2 ft. from May to October the N. wind continues to blow with such force and constancy as to give the current a S. direction. Navigation by sailing vessel is thus made almost seasonal. The temperature of the surface waters is high rising in May and June to 90° the deepest waters have at no times a temperature of less than 70°. The animal life of the Red Sea is extraordinarily rich especially on or about the coral reefs. The principal harbors of the Red Sea are, on the African coast Suez, Kosair, Suakin and Massawa, and on the Arabian coast, Jidda, Yanbo (Yanbo) Lohra, Hodeida, and Mocha. The Red Sea has become a most important channel of commerce in connection with the Suez Canal. See Suez.

The Jews and Phenicians appear to have carried on an extensive trade upon this sea, and after the destruction of the Persian Empire it resumed its importance as the principal route of traffic between Europe and the East, which position it retained until the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope and which it has recently regained. The trade from shore to shore at present is not of much importance.

Rhine (Ger. Rhein, river Dutch, Rijn or Rhe river Fr. Rhin, Rhône, and Rhous), the most important commercial river of the continent of Europe and the largest river of Germany is formed in Switzerland by the union of two small streams, the Hinter Rhein and the Vorder Rhein, the former of which has its source in the Paradies (or Rheinwald) Glacier near the NW base of the San Bernar-

Great Falls, at an elevation of 7370 feet, while the latter issues from Lake Toms, near the N foot of the St. Gottard mountain, at an altitude of 7860 ft. The two arms unite at Reichenau, in the canton of Grisons, whence the course of the stream is directed generally northward to Lake Constance, which it enters near its SE. extremity a short distance from Rheineck. In this portion of its course the river forms part of the boundary between Switzerland and Austria (Vorarlberg). Passing out from the NW end of the lake the river soon expands into the Untersee, whence it flows generally westward to Basel, forming the southern boundary of Baden. At the imposing falls of Schaffhausen (or Falls of the Rhine) where the stream in majestic leaps descends nearly 100 ft. a level of 1180 ft. above the sea has been reached. Beyond Basel the river maintains a generally northerly direction through more than four degrees of latitude, being confined entirely within German territory and passing, among the more notable towns, Strassburg, Speyer, Mannheim, Ludwigshafen, Worms, Mainz, Bingen, Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne, Düsseldorf, and Wesel. The section or flow between Basel (where regular steam navigation begins) and Bingen is ordinarily designated the Upper Rhine, that between Bingen and Cologne, Middle Rhine, and that between Cologne and the sea, or the ramified arms of the main stream, the Lower Rhine. The Rhine enters the territory of the Netherlands a short distance below Emmerich taking a westerly direction south of lat. 52° N. and almost immediately subdivides into two main and nearly parallel arms. The more southerly of these is known successively as the Waal (to Loerstein), Merwede (to Dordrecht), Noord (to Krumpen) and the Nieuwe Maas, the last-named passing Rotterdam and discharging into the North Sea at the Hook of Holland. A southern branch of this arm below Dordrecht, is known as the Oude Maas. The stream from the Merwede to the sea is by some geographers considered to be the Meuse (Mosa). The northern arm divides after a course of about 7 miles one branch being continued almost direct N to the Zuider Zee as the Yssel and the other known over most of its course as the Lek westward to its discharge into the Noord at Krumpen. From the latter branch a somewhat tortuous stream is given off at Wyk which as the Kromme Rijn (Crooked Rhine) passes Utrecht and as the Gude Rijn (Old Rhine) passes Leyden and discharges into the North Sea at Katwijk.

The total length of the Rhine from Reichenau to the North Sea, including its windings, is about 700 miles, of which 400 miles are in German territory. The width of the stream is at or near Ammannshausen, 824 feet near Bonn, 1250-1500 ft. at Cologne, 1300-1700 ft. at Emmerich 2370 ft. The normal depth of the stream in its middle and upper courses varies from 5 to 15 ft. the greater depth occasionally reaching from 25 to 70 ft. At the rocks of the Lorelei (430 ft. high) a short distance above Saarlouis the river contracts to 660 ft. and attains its maximum depth of 70 ft. Among the more important tributaries of the Rhine are the Thur and Aar in Switzerland the Ill, Neckar Main Lahn Moselle Ruhr and Lippe, in Germany. In the Netherlands it unites with the Maas, and their interassociated waters form a large part of the delta-system to which the Scheldt is a large contributor in the S. The importance of the Rhine navigation has been vastly increased by the numerous canals which establish communication with the heart of France and other parts. The most far-reaching communication of this kind is that afforded by the Ludwig's Canal, which unites the waters of the Rhine with those of the Danube.

The Rhine ranks as the most picturesque stream of Europe its well-wooded river front, its verdant slopes receding as vine-clad hills or forested and craggy mountains, its quaint towns, villages, and villa-sites, and the imposing ruins of ancient castles giving to its scenery a quality which is unknown in the case of any other river of the globe. Among the most famous of the Rhine ruins are the castles of Rheinfels, Reichenberg, Stolzenburg, Stablock, Furstenberg, and Rheinstein. Much of the region traversed by the Rhine, chiefly between Mainz and Bonn as famous for its wines, the quality of the white wine produced being unsurpassed in the world.

Rhine, a post-town of Dodge co., Ga., on the Seaboard air line. The banking point is Eastman. Pop. in 1900 191.

Rhine, a post-village in Rhine township (town) Sheboygan co., Wis. on the Sheboygan River about 21 miles SW of Manitowish. Pop. of the town in 1900, 1283.

Rhinebeck, a banking post-village in Rhinebeck township (town), Dutchess co., N. Y. 2 miles E of the Hudson River and 15 miles N of Poughkeepsie, on the Central New England R. Pop. in 1900 1484 of the town 3472. Rhinebeck station on the New York Central and Hudson River R., 2 miles to the W, was formerly known as Rhinebeck.

Rhinocott, a post-village of Dutchess co., N. Y., on the E bank of the Hudson River 15 miles above Poughkeepsie, on the New York Central and Hudson River and the Central New England R. Steam ferries connect it with Rondout and Kingston. Pop. about 500.

Rhine, Confederation of the, a league of German princes formed under the protection of Napoleon in 1806. It included the rulers of Bavaria, Württemberg, Baden, Hesse-Darmstadt, Nassau and Berg, and a number of other princes, among them the arch-chancellor Dalberg, who was made prince-primate of the confederacy. Its formation brought about the dissolution of the German Empire. After this other princes joined. In 1813 the confederacy ceased to exist.

Rhineland, a banking post-town of Montgomery co., Mo. on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas R., 18 miles S. of Danville. Pop. in 1900 153.

Rhineland, a banking city capital of Onida co., Wis. on the Chicago and Northwestern and the Minneapolis St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie R. 65 miles NNE of Wausau. It has manufactures of refrigerators, paper, beer and lumber. Pop. in 1900 4938.

Rhine Province (Rheinish Prussia) the westernmost province of Prussia, bordering on the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxemburg on the W and traversed from SE to NW by the Rhine, which here receives the Moselle from the left and the Sieg, Ruhr, and Lippe from the right. Area, 10,423 sq. m. The N. part of the region is lowland, the rest mountainous or hilly. The province has immense deposits of coal the principal fields being in the region of the Ruhr in the N and in that of the Saar (an affluent of the Moselle) in the S. It is extremely rich in metals which include iron, lead, zinc, manganese, etc. The Rhine Province is the great seat of the iron and steel manufacture of Prussia, and the textile industry is on a vast scale. The vineyards of the Rhine and Moselle are noted for their products. Among the manufacturing centers are Rheinfeld, Barmen, Essen, Cologne, Aix-la-Chapelle, Düsseldorf, Krefeld, Remscheid, Solingen, Gladbach, Duisburg, Burscheid and Lennep. The province is divided into the administrative districts of Cologne, Düsseldorf, Aix-la-Chapelle, Coblenz, and Treves. Capital, Coblenz. The university-town of Bonn is in this province. Pop. in 1900 5,759,798. This is the most populous province of Prussia and contains the largest number of inhabitants to the square mile.

Rhines (rins) or Rines of Galloway (anc. Cherontus Noron tani), a peninsula of the SW coast of Scotland, so of Wigtown cut off from the rest of the county by Loch Ryan and Luce Bay. It terminates in the S in the Mull of Galloway.

Rhoda, ro'da, or Roda, an island of Egypt, in the Nile, opposite Cairo, 2 miles in length. It contains the Khedive's gardens and the famous ancient Nilotometer.

Rhedanus, the ancient name of the Rhine.

Rhode Island, one of the New England States and one of the original thirteen members of the American Union bounded on the N and E by Massachusetts, S by the Atlantic Ocean and W by Connecticut. Its east-line is deeply indented by Narragansett Bay, which receives the Taunton and Providence estuaries. Within the bay lie Aquidneck or Rhode Island (which gives name to the state), Conanicut, Prudence, Pawtucket, Hope, Perry Dutch, and other islands, and off the coast lies Block Island which constitutes the town of New Shoreham. Area of the land-surface, 1553 sq. m. of the appertaining waters, 197 sq. m. Rhode Island is thus the smallest state of the national domain.

Face of the Country—The country is very generally rough hilly and stony especially in the NW, but towards the sea-shore there are some level pine plains and cedar swamps. There are no mountains in the state. Dorset Hill in the NW, and Jewell Hill rising respectively to 805 and 795 feet, are the loftiest elevations of the state. The island of Aquidneck is for the most part very fertile and has been called "the Eden of America." Block Island is also very productive.

Rivers, etc.—The so-called Providence River is an arm of Narragansett Bay and is also an estuary for the waters of the Blackstone, Pawtucket, or Seekonk River which is navigable to Pawtucket. Large vessels ascend the estuary to Providence, where the Woonasquatucket and Moonasuck discharge their waters. Mount Hope Bay is the eastern arm of Narragansett Bay and the estuary of the Taunton River. The Pawtucket (a tributary of the Providence estuary), Pawtucket (which forms part of the SW bound-with Connecticut), Wood, and nearly all the other islands afford water-power which is extensively utilized.

Geology. Minerals, etc.—A great part of the state is underlain by Laurentian or Koscius rocks, but the island of Aquidneck and a strip reaching northward and north eastward far into Massachusetts are of Carboniferous age, and in the extreme N there is a small area referred to the Devonian. The surface is generally deeply buried in drift. There are some local developments of coal which is a very hard and much metamorphosed anthracite or semi-graphite and difficult to burn. It was formerly mined at Portsmouth, Cumberland, and Valley Falls. At Westerly there are extensive granite-quarries and at Limerock lime is quarried and burned. Iron-ores have been found at several points, and some ores of copper with small amounts of native copper. Amorphous graphite is supplied by Providence co. The granite quarried in 1903 was valued at $710,391.

The climate is milder and more agreeable than in the other New England states with a mean temperature for January of 30° and for July of 75°-70°. The annual rainfall varies from 40 to 50 inches.

Agriculture.—The soil of Aquidneck Island is mostly excellent and its better in high repute. Before the Revolution the island had a famous breed of pading horses which were largely exported to the West Indies. The large number of manufacturing towns has rendered market gardening, dairying and milk farming profitable employments. Most of the soil is better adapted for grazing than for tillage. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were oats 263,304 bushels, oats, 114,484 bushels barley 8724 bushels potatoes 698,333 bushels and hay 66,494 tons.

Maritime Pursuits.—Providence had once a great West India and China trade and Newport was in colonial times a seat of the African slave-trade. But since many years the foreign commerce of the state has been comparatively unimportant. Providence receives great amounts of coal and cotton for the neighboring states, as well as for the home supply and is an important outlet for the manufactured goods of New England. The fisheries employ a large number of vessels of light tonnage chiefly in taking fresh fish (cod, haddock blue-fish etc.) for the New York market. The cup (or porgy) is largely taken in Narragansett Bay as well as the shad and sloop (or river-herring). Menhaden are extensively caught for making oil and fish guano. The clams of Narragansett Bay are renowned and in the Providence River oyster planting is an important pursuit. The dried codfish of Block Island is in high repute.

Manufactures constitute by far the leading industrial pursuits of Rhode Island. The textile industry holds the first position the product in this field in 1900 having been valued at $78,133,258. Rhode Island ranks high among the wool-manufacturing states and in the manufacture of cotton it is surpassed only by Massachusetts. The greater part of the manufacturing industries are concentrated in Providence, Pawtucket, and Bristol. In 1900 the value of the products of the leading industries were jewelry $13,320,620 foundry and machine-shop products, $13,289,080 cotton goods $20,435,075 woollens, $33,341,329 woollens, $6,330,160 textile dyeing, etc. $3,484,878 silver-ware, $3,334,408 rubber and elastic goods $2,618,258, silk, $1,311,333.

Railroads.—In 1880 the railroads measured 66 miles in 1860 108 miles in 1870 136 miles in 1880 210 miles in 1890 224 miles in 1900 (a decrease) 269 miles.

The coarser are Bristol, Kent, Newport, Providence, and Washington.

The principal cities and towns are Providence, the state capital (pop. in 1900 170,567), Pawtucket (39,231), Woonsocket (28,204), Newport (22,034) and Central Falls (18,107). Newport is the most fashionable of American sea-side resorts. Narragansett Pier is also a noted watering-place.

Government, etc.—Down in 1643 the state government was based upon the colonial charter of 1643 which was granted by Charles II. but in that year the present state constitution was adopted. The governor is chosen annually. The general assembly consists of a senate and house of representatives elected annually. The state sends 2 members to the lower house of Congress.

Education.—The leading institution of learning in the state is Brown University at Providence, which is one of the oldest colleges in the country. A state agricultural and mechanical college is maintained at Kingston and a state normal school at Providence.

Population.—In 1730 the population was 17,935. In 1770, 56,476; in 1790 68,836; in 1800 69,122; in 1810 76,051; in 1820 83,059; in 1830 97,199; in 1840 109,830; in 1850, 147,545; in 1860 174,639; in 1870, 217,363; in 1880 270,581; in 1890, 340,506; in 1900, 452,696.

History.—Rhode Island was colonized by Roger Williams, who settled at Providence Plantations in 1639, and by William Coddington and others, who settled at Portsmouth, on Aquidneck Island (Rhode Island), in 1639. In 1639 New port was founded and in 1643 a settlement was established by Samuel Gorton at Warwick. In 1644 Roger Williams obtained a patent for the united government of the settlements, which, however, he was unable to establish before 1647. The royal charter for the Rhode Island and Providence Plantations was issued in 1663. The government of Rhode Island was remarkable in that it permitted complete freedom in religious matters. The early settlers were mainly refugees from the colonialist tyranny which prevailed in Massachusetts. Newport early became a commercial town of great wealth and refinement. In 1776 Rhode Island emancipated itself from British rule. The state did not ratify the federal constitution until 1790. It being the last of the original states to accede to it. In 1796 it was the first successful cotton-mill in the country was established at Pawtucket by Samuel Slater. In 1842 the Dorr rebellion took place, a revolt against the state of things perpetuated by the charter of 1663, which had served in place of a constitution and under which the power lay in the country towns while at the same time suffrage was restricted. As a result a new state constitution was adopted.

Rhodesia, a post-village of Meade co., Ky. Pop. 65.

Rhoden, ro'den, a town of Germany in Waldeck 24 miles WNW of Cassel. Pop. about 1500.

Rhodes, rōds (L. Rhodus; Gr. Ῥόδος, Rhōdos), an island of Turkey in the Mediterranean Sea, off the SW coast of Asia Minor, between lat. 36° 53' and 38° 28' N and lon. 27° 40' and 28° 15' E. Area, about 660 sq. m. Pop. estimated at 30,000-35,000 of whom about 8000 are Turks, 2500 Jews, and the remainder Greeks with a few Franks. The island is traversed by a number of mountain-ranges which attain an extreme elevation somewhat exceeding 4000 feet, and have long supplied good timber for ship-building. The valleys are well watered and highly fertile. The principal exports are wax, honey, figs, coral, sponges, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, wine, valonia, onions and manufactured silk. The grape is of a particularly fine quality. The island is frequently visited by earthquakes. It is the seat of a Turkish pasha and of a Greek bishop. Capital, Rhodes.

Rhodes, a seaport of Asiatic Turkey capital of the island of Rhodes at its NE extremity, 13 miles SE of the nearest promontory of Asia Minor. Lat. 36° 20' N, lon. 28° 13' E. The town has two harbors, one of which is checked with sand. It presents a picturesque and imposing appearance, rising amphitheatrically from the shore and surrounded by its old walls, now dilapidated, constructed by the Knights of St. John above which rise the domes and minarets of its many mosques, once Christian churches. Within the town is a museum but interesting in its memorials of the time when it was one of the bulwarks of Christendom against the Turks. The Street of the Knights is impressive with its massive old structures, still bearing the medieval coats of arms. The Grand Hospital of the Knights is now used for barracks. The palace of the Grand Master and the Church of St. John were shattered by the explosion of the powder magazines in 1856 and their destruction was completed by an earthquake. The general aspect of the place is that of a decaying city but the outskirts are attractive with their country houses and gardens. The population is about 10,000 and is composed of Turks, Greeks, and Jews, the Christians inhabiting the suburbs. Many coasting vessels touch here, but the volume of the trade is not very large. The town is the seat of a Greek archbishop. In antiquity it was one of the most celebrated of Greek cities, and it occupies a leading position in the history of Greek art, especially sculpture. It boasted of the famous bronze Colossus (representing Helios, the sun god of the Rhodians) one of the seven wonders of the world which stood at the entrance of its harbor. It was also celebrated as a seat of learning. It figured as a powerful independent maritime republic, reaching the height of its power in the period following the establishment of Macedonian rule in the East. Under the Romans it long enjoyed a semi-independent position. After forming part of the Byzantine Empire, it passed to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem who held it from 1309 to 1522 when, after a heroic resistance, it capitulated to the Turks under Solymen the Magnificent. The knights soon after established themselves at Malta.

Rhodes, IRVEN and OTHER. See APPENDIX.

Rhodes, a banking post-village of Marshall co., Iowa on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. Pop. about 450.

Rhodesia, ro-dē-si-ā, a region of southern Africa, under British domination, lying broadly between lat. 8° 30' and 22° S., and bounded by Angola, the Congo Free State, German East Africa, the British Central African Protectorate, Portuguese East Africa, the Transvaal Colony, the Bechuanaland and German Southwest Africa. It is divided into two main divisions, Northern Rhodesia and Southern Rhodesia, the Zambezi River forming the dividing line. Southern Rhodesia, also known as British South Africa, corresponds in a general way to the two regions formerly designated Matabeleland and Mashonaland and has an area of about 144,000 sq. m. Its capital is Salisbury which has superseded Bulawayo. It is governed by a resident commissioner, assisted by executive and legislative councils. Northern Rhodesia, which is included in the field of operations of the South African Company, is subdivided into Northern Rhodesia, whose boundary extends to Lake Tanganyika and whose area is thought to cover about 120,000 sq. m. and Northwestern Rhodesia or Bechuanaland. Much of the region of Rhodesia is well watered and suited for agricultural pursuits; the chief crops being rice, wheat, oats, and other products of temperate regions. Coffee is also grown and some rubber is exported. Gold is extensively mined; the gold-fields area being thought to cover not less than 5000 sq. m. The gold product for the year 1903 was 231,872 ounces. Other minerals are silver, copper, lead, zinc, antimony and coal; the last-named occurring in vast and important deposits near the Zambesi in the region of Wankie (Wankie). The chief towns and stations are Bulawayo, Salisbury and Umtali, which are on the Cape and Beira railway (Victoria, Gwelo and Inyanga). A railway extends from Bulawayo to the Victoria Falls on the Zambesi River. The European population of Southern Rhodesia in 1901 was 11,032, of Northwestern Rhodesia in 1901 341.

Rhône, a river of Switzerland in the Rhône Glacier between the Furka and Grimsel mountains, flows SW past Brig and Sun to Martigny (near the former head of Lake Geneva) where it turns sharply to the NW and enters the Lake of Geneva (at Bouveret) near its E. extremity. At Geneva it leaves the SW part of the lake and shortly afterwards enters French territory passing through a spur of the Jura Mountains in the famous river-sink or gorge known as the Porte du Rhône. The course of the river is now passing Seyssel, and then tortuously W to Lyons, where it receives the Saône. From this point it flows nearly due S past Valence, Valence, Arles, Beaucaire, and Tarascon, to Arles where it separates into several branches, forming a delta called La Camargue (or Ile de La Camargue, with a total area of about 300 sq. m.) and enters the Gulf of Lyons, in the Mediterranean, by two main arms, the Petit Rhône (in the W) and the navigable Grand Rhône (in the E). The annual discharge of Rhône sediment is about 22,000,000 cubic yards and the encroachment of the land upon the sea at the mouth of the river is extraordinarily rapid. In a period of less than 200 years the land-surface had extended seaward 4 1/2 miles. Principal affluents on the right, are the Ain Rhône, Ardèche, and Gard; on the left, the Isère, Drôme, and Durance. The total length of the Rhône is about 500 miles, of which some 160 miles (inclusive of the Lake Geneva section) are in Switzerland. The river becomes navigable at Le Puy, France, about 20 miles from the Swiss frontier, ocean vessels ascend to Arles. Canals connect the stream with the waters of the Loire, Seine, Yonne, and Rhine. At Arles the Rhône, although much narrower below this point, attains a width of almost exactly 1 mile.

Richmond, an independent city and port of entry of Virginia, the capital of the state, formerly in Henrico co. is situated on the N bank of the James River, at the lower falls, and at the head of tide-water, 125 miles above its mouth and 160 miles in a straight line S by W of Washington. Lat. of capital, 37° 23' 17" N, lon 77° 27' 28" W. It is connected with Manchester on the S side of the river by several bridges, and the city is also connected by bridge with Belle Isle. The chief railroads crossing in or passing through Richmond are the Chesapeake and Ohio, the Southern the Atlantic Coast, the Norfolk and Western and the Seaboard Air lines. The city has direct steamer communication with New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other ports.

Richmond, which is one of the most interesting cities of the southern United States and the chief industrial centre of its state, is regularly laid out, and contains a number of imposing public edifices. Occupying a nearly central position on Shockoe Hill and in Capitol Square, is the capitol (or state-house) designed in part after the Maison Carrée at Nîmes, France, and dating from 1785. Near by are the city hall, St. Paul's church, the state library (with upward of 100,000 volumes) post-office and governor's mansion. Other noted buildings and institutions are the White House of the Confederacy or Jefferson Davis Mansion (now a Museum of Confederate Relics) Chief-Justice Marshall's house, masonic temple, Exposition Buildings, Soldiers Home and Valentine Museum (mainly archaeological and historical). Among the more notable sculptural works of the city are the Crawford monumental group of Washington, Hooden statue of Washington and the statue of Robert E. Lee by Meritt. The city is provided with a fine system of parks (Reservoir, Monroe, Jefferson, Marshall, Chimborazo, etc.) and has a national cemetery and the more famous Hollywood Cemetery the latter containing the graves of presidents Monroe and Tyler John Randolph Jefferson Davis, and Commodore Barry. The foremost educational institutions are Richmond College (Baptist), Union Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) Medical College of Virginia, University College of Medicine Women's College, and the Marshhorn Memorial College and Virginia Union University (1899) the last two for colored.

The industrial and commercial interests of Richmond relate almost wholly to a domestic trade the foreign commerce being as yet insignificant. The city is one of the leading tobacco markets of the country manufacturing chewing and smoking tobacco, snuff, cigars, and cigarettes (the last-named alone being turned out to the number of several hundred millions annually). Hardly less important than the tobacco-industry is that of iron manufactures, the city being largely engaged in the manufacture of locomotives, axles, railroad-spikes, nails, horseshoes agricultural implements etc. It has also fertilizer and chemical works extensive manufactures of woodware and paper and carries on some ship-building.

Richmond was laid out in 1733 and incorporated in 1742. In 1770 it became the state capital. In 1861 it was made the capital of the Southern Confederacy and became the objective point of the principal military operations of the Union forces in the East. After an obstinate siege, it was evacuated on the night of April 2, 1865 and on the following day was captured by the Federal army. The warehouses were fired by the retreating Confederates and the greater portion of the business part of the city was destroyed. In 1890 the population was 5737 in 1860 27,570 in 1860 37,010 in 1870 51,038 in 1880 63,000 in 1890 81,388; in 1900 85,000 nearly one-half of whom were colored.

Rocky Mountains, the most extensive mountain-system of the North American continent, occupying its western portion and extending almost continuously from the Mexican frontier to Alaska and the region of the Arctic Ocean. In a broader sense the term includes the Sierra Nevada and the Coast and Cascade ranges, but by most geographers it is restricted to the interior ranges, which are then known as the Rocky Mountains proper. In this place the latter alone will be considered and the reader is referred for the other divisions to their respective headings. The full relations of the Alaskan mountains (with their highest summits, Mount McKinley, 20,464 feet; St. Elias, 18,016 ft.; Logan, etc.) have not yet been ascertained. The Rocky Mountains pursue in their main axis a generally SE-NW course through the United States and Canada. On their eastern ends they are usually abruptly defined from the great undulating plains that press to their base. The system is in parts of great width covering nearly a thousand miles, and is constructed of a large number of subordinate ridges and swells and included lofty plateaus. A feature that is remarkably developed in the southwestern United States. The principal ranges connected with this system have received different names and some of them are known by several synonyms. Among them are the Snowy Range (or Continental Divide), Front Range, Wind River Mountains, Laramie Range, Medicine Bow Range, Elk Mountains, Park Range, Big Horn Mountains, Bitter Root Mountains, Sangre de Cristo Range, Higuache Mountains, Uintah Mountains, Uncompaghe Mountains, Wasatch Mountains, and Selkirk Mountains (the last named is in Canada). These are separately noticed under their proper heads, as well as the more distinctive features—such as the Grand Cañon of the Colorado, the Great Basin and the Yellowstone National Park—which are a part of the Rocky Mountain region.

The main line of the Rocky Mountains is in the United States constituted by what is collectively known as the Eastern Range, which enters Montana from Canada as the Main Divide and enters in the southwestern part of that state with a prolongation of the Bitter Root Mountains. Beyond the Yellowstone National Park in Wyoming the principal axis is that of the Wind River Mountains, which contain the lofty Fremont Peak 13,790 feet. A remarkable break in the continuity of the mountain-mass is found in southeastern Wyoming where south of the Laramie Mountains an evenly graded plateau-surface of over 8000 ft. elevation which is traversed by one of the transcontinental lines of railroad, takes the place of true mountains. In the Front Range of Colorado, which abuts upon or is continued southward by the Sangre de Cristo Range, are found some of the loftiest summits of the entire system including Pike's Peak 14,168 ft. In Sierra Blanca (or Blanca Peak) the Sangre de Cristo Range contains the highest elevation of the system (excluding Alaska) 14,390 (14,464) ft. The Rocky Mountains are continued southward into New Mexico, where the main range terminates in the vicinity of Santa Fe.

Parks.—Westward of the main range of Colorado, and extending into Wyoming are several high mountain-valleys occupying the crest of the Cordilleran plateau and known as Parks. These are the North Middle and South Parks and the San Luis Valley the last named covering an area of about 5000 sq. m. and presenting a surface (rising to 8000 feet) of angular uniformity of level. These Parks remove the severity from the mountain-landscape and, indeed, give to the eye the aspect of low-lying plains or undulating farm and meadow lands. The northern Parks are bounded westward by the Park Range, which contains numerous lofty summits, such as Mount Lincoln, 14,397 ft. Quandary Peak 14,266 ft. etc.

Plateaus.—In the western part of Colorado the mountain-system swells out into lofty, flat-topped plateaus which drop abruptly to lower levels through vertical escarpments (Bass Utah, Hook Utah, etc.). This system of heights is com-traverse through the eastern half of Utah and southward into Arizona, where the streams have cut some of the most profound gorges known on the earth's surface, revealing sections of the earth's strata over a mile in thickness. In a portion of this elevated plateau, which is incised by the Colorado River and its tributaries the name of Colorado Plateau has been given. See GRAND CANYON OF THE COLORADO.

Peaks, Snow etc.—Among the loftier or better known summits of the Rocky Mountains, besides those to which reference has already been made, may be mentioned in New Mexico Cerro Blanco (14,200 feet), Las Trampas Mountain (13,160 ft.), Santa Fe Baldy Peak (13,651 ft.), Teco Peak (13,145 ft.), in Colorado, Gray's Peak (14,342 ft.), Long's Peak (14,371 ft.), Mount Rosette (14,340 ft.), Torrey Peak (14,336 ft.), Uncompahgre Peak (14,339 ft.), Mount Harvard (14,475 ft.), Mount Yale (14,187 ft.), Mount Princeton (14,100 ft.), Mountain of the Holy Cross (14,000 ft.), in Utah, Gilbert Peak (13,087 ft.), Mount Peale (13,669 ft.), Hunsome Peak (13,624 ft.), Lady Peak (12,260 ft.), in Wyoming Grand Teton (13,671 ft.), Wind River Peak (13,499 ft.), West Atlantic Peak (12,634 ft.), Mount Hooker (12,900 ft.), Atlantic Peak (12,794 ft.), Mount Oshavnet (12,000 ft.), in Idaho, Hyndman Peak (12,073 ft.), and in Montana, Mount Douglas (11,800 ft.), Mount Cowan (11,190 ft.), Crater Peak (11,178 ft.), Electric Peak (11,155 ft.). The greater number of these summits rise considerably above the theoretical snow line and present snow-caps of fairly great magnitude, but it is only in a very few cases that the snow-covering is sufficient to develop glaciers. There is no glacier of the first magnitude found S of the Canadian boundary. Many even of the loftiest summits, such as Pike's Peak, for example, are destitute of snow during the heated summer months, the deficiency of precipitation in the far interior region not permitting of a sufficiently heavy snow fall to withstand the summer heat. In this general absence of glaciers and of the eternal snow-caps, this section of the Rocky Mountains is eminently distinguished in its scenic aspect from the Alps. The American mountains, in addition, lack generally the bold and craggy forms of the mountains of Switzerland, and they are also lacking in the charming lakes which so beautifully diversify the landscape of the Swiss Alps. A considerable part of the Rocky Mountains is still heavily timbered, noble forests of coniferous trees extending to 10,000 and 11,000 ft. The timber-line on Pike's Peak is found at 11,700 ft. on Long's and Gray's Peaks at 11,100 ft. on Sierra Blanca at 10,400 ft. on Mount Washburn in Wyoming at 9,000 ft. and on Electric Peak, in Montana, at 8,400 ft.

The main Rocky Mountains in Canada are still imperfectly known but recent surveys have shown them to be much more rugged or distinctly Alpine than their continuations in the United States. Their highest elevations appear to be centered around the head-waters of the Saskatchewan and Athabasca rivers, in about lat. 51° N. where numerous peaks (Columbia Bryce, Forbes, Alberta, Bush, Frenchville, etc.) are described as rising to between 12,500 and 14,000 feet. In this region there are vast glaciers (Columbia Glacier, Lyall Glacier, Forbes Glacier, Wilcox Glacier, Bush Glacier) which help to give the region a distinctly Alpine character. West of this main range is the subordinate one of the Selkirk, several of whose summits rise above 10,000 ft. (St. Donald, 10,848 ft., Dawson 10,800 ft., Bonney 10,625 ft.). In this tract are the Illecillewaet, Asulkan, Deville, and Duncan glaciers. It would seem that in the middle Yukon and Mackenzie districts the mountains as a well-defined system of heights disappear the water parting between the Mackenzie and Pelly (or Yukon) basins being merely undulating lowland. The higher craters reappear in the farthest North.

France.—The Rocky Mountains are traversed by numerous passes some of which attain a very great elevation. Among these are, in Colorado, the Argentine Pass (13,280 feet), Berthoud's Pass, Hagerman Pass (11,680 ft.) traversed by a railroad, Marshall Pass (10,858 ft.) also traversed by a railroad, Fremont's Pass (11,313 ft.), Vets Pass (9,300 ft.) and the Poncha Pass (9,646 ft.), in Wyoming Bridger and South passes; and in Montana, the Madison or Bayou de Union passes.

Geology.—The main ranges of the Rocky Mountain system consist of a nucleus of granite or gneiss, flanked by slates and schists and conglomerate rocks of virtually all the formations from the Cambrian to the Tertiary. It would seem that the full height of the mountains was not attained until late in the Tertiary period. Igneous and volcanic rocks abound in the mountains, more particularly in Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming both in the form of intruded dykes and of vast overflow sheets of lava or basalt. The past volcanic activity in the north is perhaps still indicated in the geyser phenomena of the Yellowstone National Park.

Numerous volcanic cones are scattered about the southern terminals of the system in Arizona and New Mexico. Among the loftier volcanic summits that properly belong to the Rocky Mountains are the San Francisco Mountain, in northern Arizona, 12,794 feet, and the Spanish Peaks of Colorado, 12,620 ft.

Rich mines of gold, silver, copper, iron and lignite (Cretaceous and Tertiary coal) have been opened in various parts of the region occupied by the mountains, which contain many other useful minerals and metals, to which reference in this place is not necessary. The metallic wealth of the different sections is treated of in the special articles devoted to the states and territories.

Fauna.—The animal life of the Rocky Mountains is largely that of the western half of the continent generally with many forms which have a markedly extensive N. and S. range. As a divide between the river systems of the R. and the W. the mountain barrier is at the same time the determinant of the boundaries of the respective faunas of these streams, establishing especially among the fishes clearly defined eastern and western provinces. Among the animals that are more generally associated with the Rocky Mountain region are the grandly bearded big horn (sheep), Rocky Mountain goat (a esprine antelope), prong horn (inhabiting the plains), northern caribou, Rocky Mountain lion (puma) and many species of gopher.

Rome (L. It. Sp. and Port. Roma, ro mā; Fr. Rome, Ger. Rom rōm), the most celebrated city of the world, capital of the spiritual empire of the popes and, since 1871, of the kingdom of Italy is situated on the Tiber 17 miles NE of its mouth in the Mediterranean Sea. The city occupies chiefly the left bank of the river and lies in an undulating plain (a portion of which is the ancient Campus Martius) and on the slopes and summits of surrounding heights,—the famous Seven Hills of Rome,—the Capitoline, Palatine, Aventine, Quirinal, Viminal, Esquiline, and Caelian Hills. Prior to the establishment of Rome as the capital of united Italy there were but few modern residences on the historic hills, whose ancient ruins were buried beneath garden-crope and vineyards. Lat. of St. Peter's 41° 54' 6" N lon. 12° 27' 14" E. Elevation of the site of St. Peter's above the sea, 95 feet. Pop. in 1871, 229,867. In 1881 of the city 235,844 (communes, 300,487). In 1901, 424,942 (communes, 483,733). That portion of the city which lies on the W or right bank of the Tiber is constituted by the quarters known as the Borgo in the N (with the church of St. Peter's, the Vatican and the Carlo di Sant'Angelo) and Trastevere in the S connected with each other by the Via della Lungara. On this side is Monte Gianicolo, the ancient Janiculum. The ancient wall of Rome, the greater portion of which dates from the latter part of the third century measures on the left bank about 10 miles. It is on the outside 55 feet in height, and is pierced by 15 gates. The most famous of these is the Porta del Popolo (capitulated in its present form in 1581), through which passed the ancient Via Flaminia (the chief highway connecting Rome with the N and R of the peninsula) and where to-day in the Piazza del Popolo terminates the broad Corso Umberto Primo the most fashionable concourse of the modern city. The Tiber within the walls, occupies largely an artificial channel (excavated in 1876) and has a winding course of 3 miles. Its navigation is insignificant. The stream (which is crossed by a dozen or more bridges) has an average width of about 180-190 ft. and a depth of some 20 ft. which is however, frequently more than doubled as the result of heavy rains. Near the southern part of its course it sweeps around the Isola Tiberina, an island about 900 ft. long, connected with the main-land by 2 bridges. The Ponte Sant'Angelo the ancient Pons Aelius, connects the main portion of the city with the ostiole or citadel of Sant'Angelo, a large circular structure, which was erected by the emperor Hadrian as a mausoleum for himself in A.D. 136 and in which the remains of numerous later emperors were interred. A restoration of this interesting edifice, which at one time served as a state prison, was undertaken in 1891. The city has to-day perhaps, the best water-supply of any of the capitals of Europe, some of the ancient aqueducts having been made serviceable in carrying the water-courses from distant localities across the Campagna. The climate of Rome was until recently considered unhealthy during the warm season owing to the malarial exhalations from the Campagna. The draining of the marshy stretches around the city has, however, effected a great improvement in this respect. From the mildness of its winter climate it is a favorite resort for invalids. Mean temperature of January 47° F., of July 78° F. The tramostans or N wind, is often attended by severe storms. The sirocco or S wind, is debilitating in summer. Frost seldom lasts over the night and snow falls on an average only 13 days in the year.

Notwithstanding its architectural and artistic riches modern Rome lacks the imposing aspect of many other European capitals. The streets are in great part narrow and irregular; palaces and hotels are often seen side by side. Since 1871 however an immense amount of repair, reconstruction and improvement has been carried on with the result of extending the city largely over the eastern hills—from the Pincio (the Collis Hortorum of the Romans, the site of the famous gardens of Lucullus) on the N to the Esquilines on the S. Of the most noted modern thoroughfares, besides the Corso Umberto Primo already referred to, are the Corso Vittorio Emanuele, with its continuation the Via Nazionale the Via Sistina, with its continuation the Via Quattro Fontane, and the Via del Quirinale, with its continuation the Via Ventisette. Among the open squares may be mentioned the Piazza Colonna, one of the busiest squares of the city containing the lofty column of Marcus Aurelius the Piazza Navona, or Circo Agonale, which occupies the Stadium of Domitian, the Piazza di Spagna, with the Scala di Spagna descending to it, the artist's centre of the city Piazza di Termini Piazza del Quirinale and the Piazza Caracciolo and Piazza di San Pietro, on the W side of the Tiber. The most notable architectural monuments of modern Rome are its churches, and foremost among these is the cathedral of St. Peter's (San Pietro in Vaticano) the largest and most conspicuous ecclesiastical edifice in the world. Began in its present form in 1586 by Pope Julius II, its construction occupied 126 years. It was planned and commenced by Bramante, and carried on by Raphael, Peruzzi, Sangallo, Michael Angelo, and others, the great dome, rising with its summit cross to a height of 436 feet above the pavement, or 308 ft. above the roof being the masterpiece of Michael Angelo. The cathedral covers an area of 18 000 square yards and measures (exclusive of the portico) 636 ft. in length. The height of the nave is 151 ft. The approach to the cathedral from the E. is through the imposing Piazza di San Pietro which is flanked by the great carrying colonnades erected in 1667 by Bernini. In the centre of the square is the obelisk brought from Heliopolis by the emperor Caligula. The church of St John Lateran, located in the SE corner of the city is the mother church of Rome. It occupies the site of a palace presented to the bishop of Rome by Constantine the Great. The edifice is in part a medieval and in part a modern structure. The five general councils known as the Lateran Councils have given celebrity to this basilica, which contains the Scala Santa and the Corsini chapel. The basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore, dating in part from the fifth century, is one of the five patriarchal churches of the city. Hardly less famous is the ancient church of Santa Maria in Aracoeli. One of the oldest churches is San Pietro in Vincoli, founded by the empress Eudocia about 442 repeatedly restored and now thoroughly modernized. San Paolo fuori le Mura, at the S end of the city, near the Porta San Paolo, was founded in 386 on the site of a small church of Constantine. Before the great fire of 1823 which destroyed the building almost completely it was considered the most interesting church in Rome. The present edifice is noted for its sumptuous interior.

No city of the world outside of Italy compares with Rome in the fame and art treasures of its palaces among which the Vatican residence of the pope stands pre-eminent. This extraordinary edifice, the work of many ages, contains probably not less than 1000 halls, chapels, and private apartments. Of these the most noted are the Sala Regia, the Cappella Sixtina, or Sixtine Chapel (with the great ceiling painting by Michael Angelo, as well as this master's 'Last Judgment') the Stanze di Raffaello (with frescoes and paintings by Raphael) the Loggia di Raffaello and the halls and galleries containing the vast Vatican collections of paintings, sculpture, and antiquities—the whole presenting an array of masterpieces which is not approached anywhere in the world. The Vatican library which contains nearly 40 000 manuscripts, many of them of almost priceless value, is in the keeping of a cardinal. To it was added in 1923 the Bibliotheca Barberiniana. The palace of the Quirinal, the construction of which was begun in 1584, has been since 1871 the residence of the king of Italy. Of the numerous other palaces of the city many of which are noted for their art treasures, may be mentioned the Palazzo del Laterano (adjoining the Lateran basilica and containing the Gregorian Museum), the Barberini-Borghese, Colonna, Cordini, Doris, and Rospigliosi palaces (the last containing Guido Reni's 'Aurora') the Palace of the Conservatori (with the new Capitoline collections), and the Capitoline Museum on the Campidoglio (or Capitoline Hill) with a collection of ancient sculptures only second to that of the Vatican. On the Piazza di Campidoglio stands the famous equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius. The villas or residences of Roman nobles are situated amidst charming gardens, ornamented with fountains and statues. The most noted are the Villa Borghese on the Pincian Hill; the Villa Medici (now occupied by a French academy of art); Villa Albani; Villa Doria-Pamphili; Villa Torlonia, and Villa Farnesina. The city is adorned with many fountains, the most splendid of which is the Fontana Trevi. Among modern sculptural monuments the equestrian statue of Garibaldi erected in 1895 is the most striking. The great national monument to Victor Emmanuel II near the Campidoglio begun in 1885 is not yet completed. Of the many scientific and literary institutions the university of Rome (Università della Sapienza, or now officially Regia Università degli Studi), founded by Boniface VIII holds first rank. It possesses faculties of law, physical science, medicine, and philology and has various collections of natural history. The enrolled students for the year 1964-65 numbered 2685. To the Collegio Romano, which was founded by the Jesuits and which has been officially superseded by the Universitas Gregoriana, belong the vast Museo Etrusco and Museo Kircheriano. The Collegio di Propaganda Fide, founded by Gregory XV in 1622 prepares for missionary service in all parts of the globe. Next to the library of the Vatican the chief public libraries are the Casanatense, with 130 000 volumes and 6300 MSS. the Angelica library with 68,000 printed volumes, the Alessandrina library (belonging to the university) with upward of 100 000 volumes and the Biblioteca Centrale Vittorio Emanuele (formed in 1871 from the libraries of the Jesuits and suppressed convents) with about 550 000 volumes. Besides the museums of the Vatican and the Capitol the public collections comprise museums of anatomy, natural history, mineralogy, antiquities, and mosaics, and there are numerous and valuable private collections. Rome has schools of painting and archaeology (some of them belonging to foreign institutes) and many numerous charitable and benevolent institutions, and hospitals. The United States maintains schools of architecture and classical studies. A large military hospital was erected in 1885-87. Foremost among the associations of students are the Accademia dei Lincei (or Royal Academy of Sciences), Accademia Pontificia dei Novizi, Accademia degli Arcadi, Accademia di San Luca (with school of art), Accademia Medicea, etc. The chief industry of the inhabitants of Rome is connected with the production of articles of art and the supply of the numerous artists, invalids, and other visitors, its manufactures, which are unimportant, are confined to silk fabrics, hats, gloves, strings for musical instruments, artificial flowers, false pearls, mosaics, jewelry, combs, terra-cotta, vases, leather furniture, glass, candles, soap and pottery.

The more famous remains of ancient Rome comprise the Forum Romanum with the remains of numerous temples (of Vesta, Saturn, Concord, Vespasian, Caesar, Cæsar and Pollux, Faustina), triumphal arches and triumphs, the Pantheon (the modern church of Santa Maria Rotonda) a great domed temple in a state of perfect preservation containing the tombs of Raphael, Victor Emmanuel II and Humbert, the Circus Maximus (which is thought to have accommodated 200 000 spectators), the Colosseum (or Amphitheatrum Flavium, one of the most imposing buildings of the world, erected by Vespasian and dedicated by Titus in A.D. 80 measuring 1720 feet in circumference, and accommodating nearly 50 000 seated spectators), remains of the theatres of Marcellus and of Pompey, the palace of the Caesars, the mausoleum of Augustus, the tomb of Cecilia Metella (on the Appian way), various columbaria, the Mamertine prison, the Praetorian camp, the fountain of Egria, a part of the Thermae (baths) of Agrippa, those of Caracalla, Diocletian, Nero, Titus, etc., the triumphal arches of Titus, Constantine, and Septimius Severus, the columns of Antoninus and Trajan, the Cloaca Maxima (an extensive drainage-conduit), the Pyramid of Cestius, the palaces of the emperors on the Palatine Hill, the Stadium and the Pædagogium (school for imperial slaves). The famous catacombs extend beneath the city in a wide circle. More than 40 of these subterranean passages have been discovered. The most famous are the catacombs of Calixtus, Domitilla, Saint Peter and Marcellinus, Prætextatus, and Priscilla.

History—Rome first appears in history as a member of a confederacy of Latin towns clustered in a small region between the Apennines and the sea, which in the course of centuries were brought under her sway. Down to the close of the fourth century A.D. her dominions extended only over a small territory. The conquests of the next three hundred years made her mistress of the circum-Mediterranean world. According to the chronological reckoning of the Romans (based on tradition) the city was founded about 753 A.C. The little city-state appears to have been at first governed by kings. Towards the close of the sixth century A.C. (according to the common chronology) royalty was abolished and a republican government instituted with two consuls at the head of the state. At the close of the first century A.C. the republican government was succeeded by imperial rule. At this time the intellectual activity of Rome was at its height.

The following are some of the principal landmarks in the history of the territorial development of Rome. Beginning of the Samnite wars, about 343 A.C. final subjugation of Latium (which, after a period of submission had revolted against Rome) about 338 A.C. subjugation of the Samnites, about 290 A.C. subjugation of the Etruscans completed, Rome mistress of Italy (the peninsular part of what is now Italy) 265 A.C. first war with Carthage (first Punic War) 264-241 A.C. resulting in the extension of Roman dominion beyond the bounds of Italy by the conquest of the Carthaginians from Sicily, and the relinquishment soon after by Carthage of Sardinia and Corsica. Second conquest of Cisalpine Gaul, 225-222 A.C. second Punic War 218-201 A.C.—the Carthaginian power in Spain supplanted by that of Rome. Rome puts an end to the Macedonian overlordship in Greece, 197 A.C., first war in Asia, the Romans force Antiochus the Great of Syria to surrender the greater part of Asia Minor (most of which is handed over to the king of Pergamum) 192-189 A.C. destruction of the Macedonian kingdom 168 A.C. third Punic War ending in the destruction of Carthage, 149-146 A.C. Greece made a

In A.D. 395 occurred the final division of the Roman Empire into the Western Empire, with Rome as its capital and the Eastern (Byzantine or Greek) Empire, with Constantinople as its capital. The Western Empire fell a prey to the invasions of the Germanic peoples coming to an end in 476. The city of Rome was for a brief time under the rule of the Goths, who were conquered by the Byzantines in the middle of the sixth century. In the convulsions of the overthrow of the Roman Empire the temporal authority of the bishops of Rome was developed and from the eighth century Rome figures as a papal city (see PAPAL STATES). Down to the sixteenth century Rome remained the ecclesiastical centre of western Christendom. In 1309 the papal see was removed to Avignon, but from 1377 Rome was again the residence of the popes. In the latter part of the Middle Ages Rome presented the appearance of a city in ruins, but with the close of the long period of strife which distracted the papacy a new Rome began to rise. In the sixteenth century the finest efforts of the art of the Renaissance were expended upon it. In 1798-99 Rome was the capital of the Roman Republic and from 1808-14 it was in the hands of the French. There was a second Roman Republic in 1849 which came to an end through French intervention. In 1870 Rome was annexed to the Italian kingdom, of which it was made the capital in 1871.

Rotterdam, rot'ter-dâm (Dutch pron. rot'ter-dâm' L. Roterodamus) the chief commercial port and second city in population of the Netherlands is in South Holland, at the confluence of the Rette with the Nieuwe (New) Maas, 43 miles SW. of Amsterdam. Lat. 51° 55' N. lon. 4° 29' E. Pop. in 1890 209,135 in 1900 inclusive of the population of Delfshaven, Charlois, Kralingen, IJsselmonde, etc. (suburbs that have been wholly or in part annexed), 319,866. The city which has an inner or old town, surrounded by new quarters, is traversed by numerous canals and is frequently designated the Venice of the North. It is also intersected by a massive railway viaduct. The name is derived from a large dam (or dike) which marks the junction of the Rette with the Maas. The houses of the city are largely quaint gabled edifices constructed on piles and overhanging their foundations. The Maas here is from 30 to 40 feet deep and permits ocean vessels of the largest draft to enter. It is bordered by vast docks, piers, and wharves which have been built out so as to partition the river into a number of capacious basins and inner harbors. The beautiful quay known as the Boomjes forms one of the most attractive portions of the city and is at the same time a centre of the city's busy and social life. Other camping foci are the great square (or Groote Markt) and the Hoog Straat (High Street).

Rotterdam has comparatively few buildings of striking architectural effect, the most noteworthy being the Grotekerk ("Great Church") or church of St. Laurens, completed about 1475 and having one of the finest organs in the world. Rouen, rōn (anc. Ratum ager or Rotomagus) a city of France, capital of the department of Seine-Inférieure, on the right bank of the Seine, 84 miles NW of Paris and 60 miles ESE of Havre. Lat. 49° 34' N lon. 1° 6' E. On the site of its former fortifications there are now fine shady avenues. The old crooked and picturesque streets with their quaintly gabled and carved timbered houses, have given way in large part to broad, handsome boulevards in the style of those of Paris, but the city has retained many fine specimens of medieval architecture. Foremost among the many imposing edifices is the cathedral, one of the finest Gothic structures in France, erected in the thirteenth century. It is a cross-in-square plan surmounted by three beautiful towers, and has a richly decorated W facade, handsome portals, magnificent rose windows, and numerous chapels, among them the Lady Chapel, containing many splendid monuments. Henry II of England lies buried here and here was also entombed the heart of Richard Cœur-de-Lion. Rivaling the cathedral in beauty and size is the exquisite Gothic church of St. Ouen. Among other important ecclesiastical structures are the church of St. Maclon, in the flamboyant Gothic style of the fifteenth century with a fine W portal; the church of St. Vincent, with superb stained glass; the church of St. Patrice, also with splendid stained glass; the church of St. Godard; and the restored Romanesque church of St. Germain, with a crypt dating from the fourth century. The most striking secular edifices are the late Gothic Palais de Justice, built for the parliament of Normandy with profuse decorations; the Hôtel de Ville, containing a public library and picture gallery; the archbishop's residence; the fine Hôtel Bourgtheroulde, now used as a bank dating from the fifteenth century; the belfry (or Tour de la Grosse Horloge) and a museum containing rich collections. The city possesses one of the most valuable libraries in France with about 140,000 volumes. An old convent houses the museum of antiquities and the museum of natural history. There is a school of medicine and pharmacy affiliated with the university of Caen. The principal public places of Rouen are the Place de l'Hôtel de Ville and the Place de Vieux-Marché where Joan of Arc was burned and which contains a beautiful monument erected to her. Along the Seine for a mile and a half stretch fine quays rivaling those of Paris. The city is connected by a handsome stone bridge and by a suspension bridge with the suburb of Saint-Sever on the opposite bank of the river. The Seine has here been artfully deepened and a spacious port has been constructed. Rouen is one of the chief seats of the textile industry in France. Rumania, a kingdom of southern Europe, comprising the former principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, the former to the NE. and the latter to the SW. It is bounded on the N and W by Austria-Hungary, on the E by Russia and the Black Sea, on the S by Bulgaria, and for a short distance on the W by Serbia. The Carpathians stretch like a great wall on the side of Austria-Hungary. The rivers Pruth and Danube separate the country from Russia. The Danube forms the greater part of the southern boundary and separates Rumania from Serbia. This river traverses the SE. part of the kingdom, which includes its delta. The district between it and the Black Sea, acquired in 1878 (having been previously part of Bulgaria), is called the Dobruja. Rumania lies between the parallels of 43° 40' and 48° 16' N. latitude. Area, about 50,700 sq. m. The country comprises the greater part of the vast basin of the lower Danube, and the bulk of it is a great plain, into which project (covering a large area) the spurs and foothills of the Carpathians. The NE. part of the plain in Moldavia, is elevated and in its formation partakes of the character of the Russian steppes. A great part of the Wallachian plain is a lowland but slightly elevated above the level of the sea. Here the Danube has flat and marshy banks. The Dobruja, outside of the delta region is mostly a plateau from which rise some low mountains. The Carpathians in Wallachia attain an elevation of about 8000 feet.

Moldavia is traversed from N to S by the river Sereth which joins the Danube a few miles above the influx of the Pruth. A number of large affluents of the Danube course over the Wallachian plain, the principal from W to E being the Soly (Jial) Aluta (which breaks through the Carpathians in the Red Tower Pass) Argech, Valomitza, and Buzau (Buzau). Of the Rumanian rivers the Danube and Pruth also are navigable. Sea-going vessels around the Danube to Braile. There are no natural harbors on the coast of the Dobruja, but an artificial port has been created at Kustendje through the construction of great works. The climate of the country is of a continental character with long and cold winters (the Danube mouths being ice-bound for a considerable part of the winter) and very hot summers. The average annual rainfall is only about 20 inches and droughts are frequent.

The Rumanian plains belong to the most fertile regions of Europe. They produce enormous crops of grain especially wheat (about 75,000,000 bushels in 1902) and maize (about 112,000,000 bushels in 1901). Among other products, in addition to ordinary fruits and vegetables, are rape-seed, flax, tobacco, beets (for sugar) and wine. The vineyards and plum orchards cover a large area. There are extensive forests, largely of oaks, fir, and beeches. Rumania is a great pastoral as well as an agricultural country cattle, sheep, horses, and swine being reared in vast numbers. The buffalo is frequently seen on the farms. Bee-keeping is an important industry. Salt and petroleum which are obtained in abundance in the region of the Carpathians, constitute the mineral riches of the country. The manufacturing industries are still mainly of a domestic character. A beginning has however, been made in the way of establishing modern factories. Cereals constitute the great bulk of the exports of Rumania, their value in 1902 having been about $47,000,000. The countries having the largest share of the trade with Rumania are Austria-Hungary, Germany, and Great Britain. There are about 2000 miles of railway, all belonging to the state.

The government of Rumania is a constitutional monarchy. The succession is in the male line. The legislature consists of a senate and a chamber of deputies, the members of the former being elected for eight years and those of the latter for four years. All citizens paying a tax how ever small, are entitled to vote, but the suffrage is unevenly distributed the voters being divided into classes (electoral colleges), based upon property-tax-profession qualifications, the voters in one class not having the same representation relative to numbers as those in another. The population in 1900 was 5,912,530, nearly nine-tenths being Rumanians. The Jews number more than 250,000. There are about 200,000 gypsies—more than in any country. There are large numbers of Bulgarians, Hungarians, Turks, Germans, Greeks, and Armenians. The Orthodox Greek Church is the state church and is professed by nearly all the Rumanians. It is independent, the presiding body being a synod at the head of which is the metropolitan primate of Bucharest. There are universities at Bucharest and Jassy. The largest cities are Bucharest, the capital (formerly the capital of Wallachia) Jassy (the old capital of Moldavia) and the two busy ports of Galatz and Braile.

The Romans (or Wallachs) belong linguistically to the Romance family of nations. They are a mixed race the last of the Christian nations of Europe to make its appearance in history. The establishment of Roman colonies in Dacia and Moesia gave rise to the development of a modern Romance language isolated geographically from the other Romance languages. Slavic and other foreign elements enter largely into the Ruman tongue. The Rumanians themselves claim descent from the Roman colonists of Dacia, whence their name. An extensive national literature of recent growth exists. Little more than one-half of the Rumanians dwell in Rumania. There are about 3,000,000 in Austria-Hungary (about nine-tenths of whom live in Transylvania and Hungary proper and the rest in Bukovina) perhaps one million in the Russian government of Bessarabia, and several hundred thousand in Serbia, Macedonia, and Bulgaria. Those in the extreme E. are called Tatars.

The principality of Rumania came into existence in 1859-61 through the union of the principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia. These principalities make their appearance in history towards the close of the Middle Ages. They had barely attained a large extension and considerable power when they came in conflict with the Turkish invaders of southeastern Europe. There was a long period of vassalage to the Ottoman sultans (at times merely nominal or entirely interrupted) and finally from the seventeenth century the status of subject provinces. From the early part of the eighteenth century Moldavia and Wallachia were ruled by hospodars appointed by the sultan from among the noble Greek families called Phanariotes, who exploited the inhabitants to their own advantage. In 1777 Bukovina and in 1812 Bessarabia were severed from Moldavia. In 1829 Turkey was forced to concede to Russia a protectorate over Moldavia and Wallachia (the Danubian Principalities). Russia's efforts to become the controlling power in the principalities proved however abortive, and the Crimean War put an end to her activities in this direction. Its close was followed by the union of Moldavia and Wallachia under the sway of a native Ruman ruler Prince Cuza, who was proclaimed as Alexander John I. in 1861. Rumania continued to pay tribute to the sultan. In 1860 Charles of Hohenzollern became prince. The Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78, in which the Rumanians fought bravely on the side of Russia, brought about the complete independence of Rumania and the acquisition of the Dobruja, which accession of territory however was purchased by the unfavourable retrocession to Russia of a strip of Bessarabia which that power had been forced to surrender at the close of the Crimean War. In 1881 Charles of Hohenzollern assumed the title of King of Rumania.

Rumelia (Turk. Rumli: room e-lee) a name applied to the eastern portion of the Turkish dominions in Europe, between Bulgaria on the N and the Aegean Sea and the Sea of Marmora on the S and extending from the Black Sea to the river Vardar. It thus includes Thrace and part of Macedonia. In a somewhat wider application of the name, Rumelia extends westward to the borders of Albania. The region between the coast of the Balkans and what is now Turkish Rumeli was constituted the principality of Eastern Rumelia (which see) in 1878. The name Rumelia signifies the land of Rome, the city of Constantinople, when the Mohammedans came in contact with the Byzantine Empire, having appeared to them in the light of a new Rome and been designated as such. The sultanate of Iconium, in Asia Minor, which existed at the time of the Crusades, was called by the Mohammedans the sultanate of Rum. When the Ottoman Turks conquered the Balkan peninsula, the Christian subjects of the sultan in Europe came to be known to the Mohammedan world as Rumanians, and at the present day the Greeks are still designated as such by the Mohammedans. The name Rumelia came to designate the principal part of the Turkish dominions in the Balkan Peninsula.

Russia, русскіѣ (Russ. Rossiya, ros-see-ya Fr. Russie, russee Ger. Russland, russe-land) formerly called Muscovy, a country of Europe, the dominant member of the Russian Empire. (See Russian Empire.) The main-land extends from lat. 38° 28' N. on the Caspian Sea, to 76° 16' N. in Lapland and from lon. 17° 40' to 66° 30' E. but the territories S. of the Manych River (including the whole of Caucasus) and those E. of the Ural Mountains belong more properly to the continent of Asia. Giving it the broader extension, it is bounded N. by Norway and the Arctic Ocean; E. by Siberia (the frontier with which is largely constituted by the Ural Mountains) the Kirghis country and the Caspian Sea, S. by Persia, Asiatic Turkey, the Black Sea, and Austria-Hungary, and W. by Rumania, Austria-Hungary, Prussia, the Baltic Sea, and Sweden. Apart from the grand-duchy of Finland and the general government or houtsancey of the Caucasus (Caucasia) it is divided into 60 governments 16 of which are in Poland. Area of Russia (with Poland) 1,950,000 sq. m. Finland 144,000 sq. m. and Caucasus 180,000 sq. m. Total 2,274,000 sq. m. If as is commonly done, the range of the Caucasus be regarded as constituting the boundary between Europe and Asia, then deducting from the total here given the area of Transcaucasia (minus Daghestan and that part of the government of Baku which lies N. of the Caucasus) we shall have approximately for the area of the Russian dominions in Europe the figure of 2,209,000 sq. m.

Face of the Land—The surface of Russia in Europe (not reckoning Caucasus) may be considered as one vast plain partially enclosed by the Ural Mountains on the E., the Caucasus and the heights of the Crimea on the S., and the Carpathian foot-hills on the SW. Throughout its extent this plain is not broken by a single mountain. The Baltic provinces have a mean elevation of 1000 feet above the sea, while the general elevation of the land sinks to less than one-half of this height, sloping off peripherally to the N. NW. S. and SE. The west-central part of the country is occupied by the dome-shaped moraine plateau of the Valdai Hills,—the water parting between the principal river systems of the land—the average height of which is 600 to 900 ft. and the summit 1100 ft. above the sea. These sink rapidly to the SE. where they are lost in marshes. Russia is traversed by the largest rivers in Europe, the Baltic Sea receives the Kama, Ufa, Kama, Nera, Narva, Düna, Niemen, and Vistula. The Arctic Ocean, the Pasvig, Kola, and Pechora, the White Sea, the Vlg, Onega, Dvina, and Neven, the Black Sea, the Donets, Bug, Dnieper, Don (with its chief tributary the Donets) and Kuban and the Caspian Sea, the Ural, Volga, Kuma and Terek. The Pruth and the Danube form the boundary on the side of Rumania and the Torna flows on the border of Norway. The Volga (rings in the Valdai water parting) with a length of upward of 2000 miles, which establishes by means of its intercommunicating waters direct navigation through out the length and breadth of the country, is the largest river of Europe. (See Volga.) In the N. of Russia, especially in Finland, there are numerous lakes, the chief are Ladoga (the largest in Europe) Onega, Saima, Pijijänne, Peipus, Iman and Ruana. The smaller lakes Bielo-Onega, is the government of Novgorod, and Kubenskoye, in Volhodia, are important for the internal navigation of the empire. The most valuable of the numerous salt lakes is Elton in Saratov. Among the many islands belonging to the empire Neva Zemlia (Novaya Zemlya) Valigaton, and Kolguev can properly be said to be a part of Russia in Europe. Geological phenomena warrant the conclusion that a great portion of central Russia was under the sea at a comparatively recent period. The loftiest elevations (outside of Caucasus) are found in the Ural Mountains, where a number of summits attain 5000 ft. The Taiga is being 5500 ft. Roman Kosh and Tshatyr-Dagh in the Taurian Alps of the Crimea, both attain about 6000 ft.

Tundra Steppes, etc.—The soil comprises every variety. There is an immense area of the finest agricultural land and there are great stretches unfit for cultivation. The vast region of the tundra, extending from lat. 64° N.

to the N coast, is a swamp in summer and is covered with ice for nine months in the year; it produces chiefly moss, but in some places grasses grow luxuriantly. SW of this the country, over a vast extent, is covered with forests of pine, larch, birch, and other trees, which afford valuable timber. In the SE an immense grass and steppe region, partly of an uncovered desert type, extends between the Ural and the Volga and to the SW of the lower course of the latter river a portion of it affords tolerable pasturage. E. of lon. 45° E a series of salt lakes occupy a depressed area, which once formed a portion of the Caspian Sea, the surface of which is now about 63 feet below that of the Mediterranean. This steppe is exposed to the greatest extremes of temperature in winter the thermometer is frequently 15° and sometimes 34° below zero, while in summer the heat is often upward of 100° . The region of central Russia, in the upper basin of the Volga, is the most fertile in the empire. In the S is the basin of the Dnieper and Don, reaching down to the Black Sea, is the great region of the grass steppes, in portions of which the soil, as in central Russia, consists of fertile black earth.

Climate.—From its vast extent, Russia has a great diversity of climate. The plains of the N exposed to the winds of the Arctic Ocean, are much colder than the other countries of Europe in corresponding latitudes. In nearly the whole of the northern region, between lat. 60° N on the White Sea and 62° , the soil is frozen throughout the year nearly to the surface, the temperature descending to -44° and -56° . The summer heat, although of short duration, is frequently intense. Between this frozen zone and lat. 56° N the mean annual temperature varies from 33° to 40° at St. Petersburg, which is within this zone, the thermometer in December and January sinks to more than 30° below zero while in summer it rises to 65° or 66° . S of lat. 56° the mean temperature is between 40° and 55° the winters are severe and the summers hot. In parts of the steppe region and in the Crimea the summer heat is almost of torrid intensity. The mean July temperature of Odessa is 74° . In the Baltic provinces the climate is more temperate than in the interior. In the interior SSE and S winds prevail while W and NW winds are most common on the coasts. The rainfall over a great part of Russia is small. The precipitation is most abundant in the Baltic provinces, where the average annual amount is 15 to 20 inches. The amount and frequency decrease in proceeding from W to E, and during the long summer of the southern provinces rain very seldom falls. Snow falls early in winter and covers the ground to a great depth.

Vegetable Resources, Live-stock.—Russia produces all the plants common to the other countries of Europe. Agriculture is still largely in a rude state. The area under crops in 1903 was nearly 210,000,000 acres and the portion covered by forest about 550,000,000 acres, the greater part of which is owned by the state. Rye is the chief cereal crop and is very widely grown; the cultivation of barley extends to lat. 67° and that of oats to 62° N wheat is grown chiefly in southern Russia. Next to the United States, Russia is the leading wheat-exporting country in the world. The portion of the basin of the Volga included in the government of Nizhni Novgorod, Penza, Kazan, and Simbirsk is called the granary of Russia. Hemp and flax are grown chiefly on the upper Volga (to a considerable extent also in Poland); tobacco is cultivated principally in the Ukraine and in Transcaucasia; grapes are grown in the Crimea, in Transcaucasia, and on the lower courses of the Don and Volga; tea is cultivated with success in the Crimea and in Transcaucasia. The forests yield valuable produce, and building-timber, tar pitch and potash are widely exported. Cattle and sheep are extensively reared, and tallow and hides are exported in great quantities. Fine breeds of horses are reared. Camels are bred by the Tartars on the steppes and in the Crimea.

Fauna.—The fauna of European Russia is essentially that of the greater part of Europe, comprising Mediterranean and Arctic types as well as the general temperate forms. A number of Asiatic forms (such as antelope, jackal) enter in the SE. The bison like acrotia is found near the sources of the Narev and in restricted parts of the Caucasus; the reindeer is confined to the region N of lat. 66° N the elk, boar deer and hare are found in the forested tracts, principally of the N and the fur-bearing animals are actively hunted. The wolf fox gibbon bear and other carnivores are numerous. In addition to the birds common to other countries of Europe, the capercaillie is found in the N the pelican in the S on the shores of the Black and Caspian seas, and the bustard in the steppe region; geese and ducks abound in the lakes. Fish is plentiful in the rivers, especially in the Volga and the Ural, and in the White Sea, the Caspian Sea, and the Sea of Azov. Astrakhan is noted as a great seat of the sturgeon-fishery.

The whale, seal, and Polar bear are extensively hunted in or about the Arctic waters.

Mineral Resources.—The mineral resources of Russia are very important, but apart from iron coal and asphalt the product is limited almost entirely to the region of the Ural Mountains and the Caucasus. The minerals or metals exploited are gold platinum, silver (in limited quantity) copper lead, manganese (Transcaucasia) mercury zinc (Poland) sulphur (Caucasia and Poland) and cobalt. The output of coal in all the coal fields in 1903 was 17,240,000 tons of which the Donets coal field furnished about 12,000,000 tons and Poland (Dombrows), 4,500,000 tons. The chief asphalt deposits are those of the Baka region the richest in the world but mineral oil is also obtained at localities in the governments of Archangel and Samara, and in Kielce Poland. Large quantities of salt are obtained from deposits of rock-salt and from numerous salines. Many forms of precious stones—among them the diamond, emerald, and topaz—are found in the Ural Mountains.

Manufactures and Commerce.—Since the time of Peter the Great, the progress of manufactures has been very rapid, and the improvement of their products has been commensurate with it. The staple manufactures are woollens, silks, linens, cottons, metal ware soap, tobacco, liquors, beet-sugar and candles besides which there are manufactures of glass, paper porcelain arms jewelry and morocco leather. The cotton-industry has been especially developed during recent years and, together with the woollen industry has an important seat in Poland. The number of people employed in the textile industries was in 1902 706,166, in the manufacture and exploitation of metals about 750,000 and in the preparation of articles of food, 303,213. The production of alcohol in the Russian Empire in 1904 was 86,754,217 gallons the product of 2570 distilleries nearly all of which were in European Russia. The sugar-industry is of great importance, the quantity of refined sugar produced in 1903-04 having been 1,180,293 tons. There are in the empire nearly 600,000 tobacco plantations. The commerce of Russia is greatly facilitated by its numerous navigable rivers and its vast and excellent system of canals by means of which not only do the Baltic and the White sea communicate with the Caspian and the Black sea, but the great lakes and the principal rivers are united into a complete system of inland navigation. There are 1,000 miles of internal navigable waters. The length of completed railroads in Russia in 1904 was 31,399 miles. A line extends through Siberia to the Pacific Ocean. Moscow is the centre of internal commerce. The chief seaports are St. Petersburg, Cronstadt and Riga on the Baltic, Archangel on the White Sea, Astrakhan on the Caspian Sea, and Odessa on the Black Sea. The chief exports comprise grain flour flax hemp timber and wooden manufactures, seeds, tallow eggs, dairy produce, furs, leather wool tar bristles, textiles, linings, bones, oil-cake, metals and metal goods, sugar asphalt and asphaltic oils, etc. Among the imports score the Asiatic frontier are tea, raw cotton and rice. The fur of Nizhni Novgorod is still an important factor in the interchange of Russian and Asiatic commodities, the value of the business transacted having diminished but little as the result of the opening up of more direct communication between distant points or of the introduction of more advanced mercantile methods.

Government etc.—The government of Russia is an absolute hereditary monarchy. All power emanates from the emperor (or czar) who is the head of the Greek Catholic Church in Russia, officially styled the Orthodox Catholic faith. All rank is based on the tenure of civil or military office. The nobility are a privileged class they have great political power and possess more than half of all the cultivated land in the country. Education is still in a backward state although it has materially advanced during late years. There are universities at Moscow (with 4344 students in 1903) St. Petersburg (3635 students in 1904) Kiev Kharkov Dorpat (Yaroslavl) Warsaw, Kazan Odessa and Helmsburg. Technical, law, medical and theological schools are found in some of the larger cities. The Russians are pre-eminently a nation of peasants and of dwellers in small towns. Previous to the reign of Alexander II the bulk of the peasantry were serfs. On March 2 1861 an imperial decree was passed declaring the emancipation of the serfs throughout the empire. Most of the land of the peasantry is not owned by individuals, but is held in common by the mir or people of the commune in which it is situated a redistribution of the land among the households comprising the mir being made at intervals of a number of years. Part of the land is kept reserved for common purposes. The existence of the mir as a political unit reduces to the Russian peasantry the enjoyment of local self government to a remarkable degree considering the autocratic form of rule in the empire. The seat of government since the beginning of the eighteenth century has been St. Petersburg, but Moscow the former capital, has remained the focus of the national life of the Russian people.

Population.—The main political subdivisions of the Russian Empire are the governments, replaced in the newer parts of the empire by military districts or provinces (territories).

The following table exhibits the population of Russia (Russia proper, Poland, Finland, Caucasus), according to the census of 1897

The total population in 1897 of Russia in Europe, not reckoning any part of the Caucasus, was 108,364,186. The population in 1902 was estimated at 115,000,000. It is now (1902) approximately 120,000,000 the annual excess of births over deaths being about 2,000,000. It consists mainly of Russians, Poles, Lithuanians, Letts, Jews, Finns and other Finnish peoples, Tartars, and Germans. (For a list of the nationalities in the whole empire, see Russian Empire.) About three-fourths of the inhabitants of European Russia are Russians, who comprise about three-fourths of the whole Slavic race. The Russians are divided into Great Russians, Little Russians, and White Russians. More than two-thirds are Great Russians, who comprise nearly all the inhabitants of the central governments and constitute the bulk of the population in the N. (exclusive of Finland) and the E. The Little Russians are about one-third as numerous as the Great Russians. They dwell mainly in the governments of Kiev, Kharkov, Poltava, and Tchernigov in the SW (Little Russia or Male-Russia). Their dialect differs from the speech of the Great Russians and is spoken by the Ruthenians in Austria-Hungary. The White Russians number about 3,000,000 the bulk of them living in Lithuania. The Russians constitute about one-fourth of the population of Asiatic Russia (including Caucasus). The whole body of the Russians belong to the Greek Church, but there are millions of dissenters within the church called Schismatics. The Poles in Russia number about 2,000,000. They are Roman Catholics, were also the bulk of the Lithuanians, whose territory down to the latter part of the eighteenth century, formed part of the old kingdom of Poland. The Germans who number about 2,000,000, live mainly in the Baltic Provinces (where they constitute the educated class) Poland, and southern Russia. They are Protestants. The Jews, who number about 5,000,000, are crowded together in the cities and towns of Poland, Lithuania, and the SW part of Russia proper. They are compelled to live within a specified pale, and while unhindered in their religious observances, they are treated as a down-trodden race. The Finns proper, who inhabit the NW corner of European Russia (Finland) were until the beginning of the nineteenth century subjects of Sweden and are Protestants. There are a number of Finnish tribes scattered over a large area in the N and E. Their Russianization is progressing steadily. The Russians (Moldavians) inhabit Bessarabia. The Tartars dwell in the E and S. The Cossacks, who live to a great extent under a military organization are a people of uncertain origin. Their principal habitat is the province known as the Territory of the Don Cossacks, on both sides of the lower Don and they are numerous on the eastern border. They speak the Little Russian dialect. See table of religious under Russian Empire.

The following 10 cities had a population of more than 100,000 in 1897: St. Petersburg, Moscow, Warsaw (the capital of Poland), Odessa, Lodz (the Polish Manchester), Riga, Kiev, Kharkov, Vilna, Saratov, Kazan, Yokatinsk, Rostov (on the Don), Astrakhan, Tula, and Kishinev.

Russia in Asia embraces Siberia and Central Asia (including the Kirgiz Steppes, Turkestan, and the Transcaspian Provinces) and, in addition to this, the whole or the southern half of Caucasus (according to whether we take the Manyash depression or the crest of the Caucasus as the dividing line between Europe and Asia) may properly be regarded as belonging to it. See Russian Empire, Siberia, Turkestan, Central Asia, etc.

History.—The foundation of the Russian Empire was laid at Novgorod about 862 by the Rus or Varangians, a body of Scandinavians (Northmen) led by Rurik whose descendants ruled for over 700 years. Rurik wanted by the Northmen from the Khazars, soon became the seat of domination. The Northmen were gradually absorbed into the body of the Slavic Russians. The grand prince Vladimir the Great embraced Christianity in 988. In the following century the country was partitioned into various principalities. In the twelfth century the grand principality of Vladimir (Serdul) became the chief seat of power being supplanted Kiev. About this time Novgorod rose to be a flourishing state. In the first half of the thirteenth century the Mongols poured into Russia, and in 1240 the Russian princes had to do homage to the Mongol Khan. Early in the fourteenth century large territories (Volhynia, Kiev, etc.) became the prey of the Lithuanians. About this time Moscow became the leading principality among the Russian states, still growing under Mongol domination. In 1478 she annexed the republic of Novgorod, and two years later shook off the Mongol yoke. Russia soon after became the realm of Moscow (Muscovy). In the middle of the sixteenth century the Russians conquered the Tartar Khanates of Kazan and Astrakhan and a little later the conquest of Siberia was begun. The Russian dominion in this region spread with extraordinary rapidity. In 1613 the Romanoff dynasty mounted the throne, which it still occupies. In the seventeenth century Smolensk, the Ukraine, and Kiev were wrested from Poland. At the close of that century and in the early years of the next Peter the Great introduced reforms of every kind in Russia and brought it forward into the body politic of Europe. He made Russia a power on the Baltic and founded St. Petersburg as the new capital in 1703. Catherine II. seized the greater part of the Polish dominions (1772, 1793, 1795) incorporated the Crimea in the empire, extended its frontiers to the Danube on the side of Turkey, and annexed Courland. In the first half of the nineteenth century the region of the Caucasus, Finland, and Persian Armenia were conquered and the frontier on the side of Turkey was pushed to the Pruth. In 1812 the new kingdom of Poland was erected for the Russian dynasty. The Amur country was acquired in 1858. In 1867 Alaska was sold to the United States. Samarkand was annexed in 1868. Khokand in 1876 a large part of Turkish Armenia in 1878 and Merv in 1884. In 1896, by an agreement with China, Russia obtained a foothold at the extremity of the Liaoning peninsula (the southern projection of Manchuria) where Port Arthur was converted into an almost impregnable naval station, while a great commercial port was erected at Dainy, the two places being made terminal of a branch of the Transiberian railway. The convulsions attending the Boxer movement in China in 1900 gave the Russians an opportunity to occupy Man-church. Their advance in this direction brought on in 1904 a Sino-Japanese war with Japan. The Japanese took Dalny, forced Port Arthur to surrender (Jan 1905), drove the enemy from Mukden, and destroyed the Russian naval power. Conformably to a treaty of peace negotiated under the mediation of President Roosevelt, at Portsmouth N. H., and signed Sept. 5 1905 Russia withdrew from Manchuria, allowed Japan to retain Port Arthur ceded half of Saghalin to Japan and gave the Japanese a free hand in Korea.

Saguenay, sag a-ná, a river of Quebec and one of the principal tributaries of the St. Lawrence, the estuary of which it enters 120 miles NE of Quebec, in lat. 46° 0' N, lon. 69° 38' W, and into which it brings the surplus waters of Lake St. John. Length of the course below Lake St. John about 110 miles. It leaves the lake by what is known as the Great and Little Discharge, which are separated from one another by Atlas Island. The true source of the river is one of the long streams (Peribonka, Mistassini, Ashuapmushuan) which are tributary to Lake St. John. The Saguenay is remarkable for its wild and picturesque scenery. Its upper course runs through a wilderness of pine and spruce-covered hills, abounds in water falls, and is navigable only for canoes. A few miles below the village of Chocoma, where an extensive lumber-busness is transacted, there issues from the river a beautiful expanse of water called Ha Ha Bay. Between this bay and the mouth of the river its course exhibits some of the most sublime river-scenery in the world, the banks in places (Cape Trinity and Eternity) rising to 1000 and 1700 feet. The extraordinary depth of the lower channel (the bottom at the confluence with the St. Lawrence being about 500 ft. lower than that of the major stream) and the abrupt plunge of the banks have led some geologists to assume for the structure a volcanic origin. During the summer months the Saguenay is visited by thousands of tourists. It is navigable to Ha Ha Bay for vessels of the largest class and to Chocoma for regular steamboats. It receives the waters of many tributaries. At the mouth of the river is Tadoussac, a watering place.

Sahara, al-há-rá, properly al-há-rá (Arab. al-há-rá) called the Great Desert, a vast region of northern Africa, with no very precise boundary-limitations, but lying mainly between the Atlantic Ocean on the W. and the valley of the Nile on the E., the Sudan on the S., and the Atlas Mountains and a portion of the Mediterranean Sea on the N.

The greater portion of this vast region whose greatest length exceeds 3000 miles and whose area probably covers not less than 2,000,000 sq. m., lies between lat. 17° 30' and 30° N. and is in position about one-third extra-tropical. It is perhaps in greater part a table-land of moderate elevation, or a series of plateaus of different altitudes (500-2000 feet) with no clear relationships existing between them and with irregular mountain-elevations or even chains, especially in the central portion extending far into the region.

Some of these mountain-elevations, as the Taro (7800 ft.) in the region of Tibesti (about lat. 20° N., lon. 15° 20' E.) and Iliaman (4200 ft.) and Tahat in Ahaggar (about lat. 22° 30' lon. 4° 46' E.) are partially covered with snow during several weeks of the year. The deepest depression of the true Sahara is found in a region of schotts (Mreit, Jerid), lying W. of the Gulf of Gabes, where the surface descends to 60-70 ft. below sea-level. The surface of Lake Chad on the borders of the Sudan has at an altitude of about 130 ft. A considerable portion of the Sahara presents strictly desert conditions, with vast areas especially in the eastern (Libyan) and western (Moroccan) sections, having little or no vegetation but elsewhere vegetation of a restricted number of types (artemisia, tamarisk, acacia) is present in greater or less quantity especially along the oases or dry water-courses. Large numbers of oases or fertile spots, the gardens of the desert, are irregularly scattered about, in places following in close succession and in these there is even a profuse vegetation. The phryganeic type is the date-palm, which is sometimes numbered by 100,000-500,000. The fig, peach, grape, and a number of the south European fruits are cultivated. Throughout nearly the entire region there are no permanent water-courses (the Nile crosses the E. border and the Niger traverses a part of the tract on the S.) but from time to time as fed by the waters of the interior mountains and depending upon heavy rainfall in the mountain region temporary and even tempestuous streams are developed which however soon dry up or are absorbed by the desert-sands. The largest of such streams appear to be the two Igbarghar both descending from the heights of Ahaggar—one flowing northward into the depression of Mreit and the other southwestward towards the Niger. Much water is distributed through the sands even in the highest superficial zone, and is frequently tapped in artesian and native wells at a depth of 20-75 feet.

As regards its surface aspect, two types of the Sahara are recognized 1. the Hemada (or stony Sahara) where solid rock masses, either as flattened or horizontally placed plateaus, or as disturbed mountain fragments, constitute the dominating feature of the land and 2. the Ery or Argy the region of shifting sands and dunes, the latter not infrequently 300-500 feet in height, or even attaining 1000-1400 feet, as near the coast of Tuggurt. Over large areas the sands are manifestly only degradational products derived from the rocks.

The climate of the Sahara is varied and presents extremes of diurnal as well as of seasonal temperature. The daily summer temperature in the low lying areas frequently rises to 115°-120° or even higher whereas in winter frosts are in some sections by no means exceptional. Even at times of extreme heat by day freezing resulting from extremely rapid radiation may be a characteristic of the nightly period. At other times however the temperature of night may remain at 100°-105°. Storm-winds (a sirocco) penetrating through their high temperature and the sand which they carry with them, are a serious nuisance to travellers in the Saharan region. The exact conditions of the Saharan climate are not yet fully understood, nor is the meteorologist in a position to state in how far the present desert conditions represent the past history of the region. It would appear however from the discovery of the remains of many popular trees, together with Roman remains, in the region of El Otaia, N. of Misra, that once a part of the Sahara, at least, desert conditions have become acclimated since the middle Roman period. The fauna of the Sahara is a restricted one the deficiency of vegetation and water readily accounting for this condition. Of the most broadly distributed and more general animal types are the jackal hyena, numerous antelopes or gazelles, jumping-mice or jerboas, lizards, and the horned or sand-viper. The lion and panther rarely penetrate far beyond the confines of the region, and there are comparatively few animal types of the true African fauna of the south and centre of the continent which reach northward. The Sahara, in fact, is a barrier to migration almost as pronounced as would be an arm of the sea. Regarding the geological history of the region much still remains to be determined, but there exists hardly a doubt, as is indicated by the fossil remains that have been found (1903-04) at Bilma, Niger, Ténéré (350 miles W of Elader) and near Elader itself, that as late as the Cretaceous and Tertiary ages of geological time a vast sea swept over the major portion of the region and extended perhaps continuously to Beluchistan and British India. The Sahara has yielded some metals, but its principal product is salt, which is obtained in large quantities at Bilma, Tadmey and elsewhere.

A number of well marked-out caravan routes traverse the interior of the region and supply avenues of commercial enterprise. Among the more important of these are the routes (from Fez or the city of Morocco) from Ghardaia and Ouargla, in Algeria, from Ghadames and Mersa in Tripoli, having Tlebkuta and other places in the Niger region or the Sudan territory about Lake Chad, for objective points. Various lines of railway have been projected to penetrate into the interior but so far—largely as the result of the enmity to foreigners shown by some of the interior roving tribes, more particularly the Tuaregs,—comparatively little has been accomplished. The line seemingly having the greatest promise is the one projected to unite the city of Algiers with the great bend of the Niger (passing Laghouat and Ghardaia).

Saint Lawrence (Fr. Saint-Laurent, sic the old det. bds.) one of the largest rivers of North America, the outlet of the Great Lakes, issues from Lake Ontario through what is known as the Lake of the Thousand Islands, in about lat. 44° 10' N. and lon. 76° 30' W., and, flowing in a NE. direction forming in a part of its course the boundary between New York and Canada, falls into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, by an estuary 80 miles across, in about lat. 49° 30' N. and lon. 64° W. Viewing this river in connection with the Great Lakes, it may be said to rise at the sources of the St. Louis, which flows into Lake Superior a few miles SW. of Duluth. The stream, taken in this broadest extension, has received different names in different parts of its course between lakes Superior and Huron it is called the St. Mary's; between lakes Huron and Erie the St. Clair and Detroit; between lakes Erie and Ontario, the Niagara; between Lake Ontario and the sea it is the St. Lawrence proper. Its full length including the shoals of lakes, is estimated at 2100-2200 miles. Many geographers place the true mouth of the St. Lawrence (increasing the extent of the Gulf of St. Lawrence) between Pointe des Monts and Cape Chertea, which is at a distance in a direct line of 560 miles from Lake Ontario. The St. Lawrence discharges a greater quantity of water than any river of the globe excepting the Amazon, and it drains the largest association of fresh-water lakes. Its general width is 1-3 miles, expanding in Lake St. Peter to about 7 miles, and below Quebec, on the island of Orleans, rapidly broadening to 10 miles. In its lower course it reaches a width of 30-40 miles. The river is navigable for large ocean vessels to Montreal. Between Montreal and Lake Ontario the navigation is considerably impeded by rapids the most important of which are Cedar Coteau, the Cascades, and the Lachine, the latter 3 miles above Montreal. This is overcome by the canals, which have an aggregate length of 42 miles, river steamers being enabled to ascend all the way to the lake. Steamers pass through the rapids on descending the river. The total fall from Lake Ontario to the Gulf is 247 feet. Tide-water ascends to Three Rivers, about half way between Quebec and Montreal. The depth of water at or near Quebec reaches 100 ft. and the sunken estuary has the extraordinary depth of 1200 ft. By means of the Richelieu (or St. John) River and Chambly Canal large vessels pass from the St. Lawrence to Lake Champlain, which communicates through canal with the navigable waters of the Hudson. The principal affluents of the St. Lawrence are the Ottawa, the St. Maurice, Batiscan, Richelieu, St. Francis, Chaudière, and Saguenay. The St. Lawrence, with its tributaries, drains an area probably not much exceeding 400,000 sq. m. The navigation of the river, owing to ice, is usually suspended for 4-6 months. In 1535-36 Jacques Cartier ascended the St. Lawrence River as far as the site of Montreal. See ORFÈVRE, HENRI, NIAGARA etc.

Saint Louis, sept loo'is or loo'ee, the chief city of Missouri and the fourth in population of the cities of the United States, is situated on the W bank of the Mississippi River 39 miles below the mouth of the Missouri, 600 miles (direct) N by W of New Orleans, and 876 miles WSW of New York. Lat. of observatory 38° 38' 3" N lon. 90° 12' 17" W. The centre of one of the finest agricultural districts, with admirable facilities for water transportation and vast railroad systems. St. Louis possesses almost unparalleled business advantages. The Mississippi gives it direct communication with many thousands of miles of navigable water and numerous great lines of railroad radiate from St. Louis as a centre and place it in communication with all sections of the country. Among the railroads of the St. Louis system are the St. Louis and San Francisco, the Missouri Pacific, the Missouri Kansas and Texas the Burlington Route, the Wabash the Cleveland Cincinnati Chicago and St. Louis, the Vandavia Line, the Louisville and Nashville, the Mobile and Ohio, and the St. Louis Iron Mountain and Southern. All of these lines together with others hardly less important, now use the Union Station a colossal structure erected in 1905 at a cost of $5,000,000 and giving accommodation to 33 trains.

The city whose major part lies at an elevation of 400-500 feet above the sea, is built on three terraces the uppermost of which is about 200 ft. above the river surface. It is laid out on the rectangular plan, the streets running N and S being numbered serially from the river. The more important thoroughfares are Washington Avenue, devoted largely to wholesale trade interests and Broadway (or Fifth) and Olive Streets, with the more attractive retail shops. The river-front is largely a levee, along which are lined the numerous steamers that are engaged in the navigation of the Mississippi River, although still at times heaving with life, it no longer shows that activity which was a feature of the city before the later days of railroad development. The magnificent Eads Bridge, which crosses the river at this point and permits the eastern railroads to enter directly into the city, consists of three steel spans, each of which is over 500 ft. in length, and is justly considered a master piece in bridge-building. It was constructed in 1869-74, and cost, with its vast tunnel, about $11,000,000. The Merchants Bridge, designed exclusively for railroads, is 3 miles further up the river, and was completed in 1894 at a cost of about $3,000,000. St. Louis has a most complete electrical and cable street-railway system.

Among the notable buildings and institutions of the city are the new city hall (occupying a conspicuous position in Washington Park), the court-house, chamber of commerce, the custom-house and post-office, the Fess Court (an immense structure designed in pattern after the Louvre of Paris), museum of fine arts, and the coliseum, the latter named an enormous edifice designed for concerts, conventions, and expositions, and giving seating accommodation to 15,000 persons. Many of the business houses are massive architectural constructions. The Washington University is an important institution of learning, and has schools of art, science, engineering law and medicine. The attendance in 1904 (exclusive of the School of Fine Arts) was about 1900. The St. Louis University is a Roman Catholic institution. Among special schools the St. Louis Medical College occupies a high position. Other educational institutions are the Forest Park University for Women, Christian Brothers College, Kew-Fish Theological Seminary, Missouri School for the Blind, Mercantile Library and the public library the last named with (1905) nearly 200,000 volumes. The city has a large number of beautiful churches and hundreds of magnificent residences. St. Louis being essentially a city of homes. It has more than 2000 acres enclosed in public parks and pleasure-grounds, some of which are handsomely improved. The most beautiful spot in the city is Tower Grove Park containing 275 acres, adjoining which is the Missouri Botanical Garden (or Shaw's Garden) which was bequeathed to the city by Henry Shaw and stands first in the rank of educational botanical gardens of the country. Forest Park, the largest park of the city contains 1370 acres.

The mean annual temperature of St. Louis is 55° F. The purity of water is secured from the Mississippi through the works at Blue's Point, and a new system of water works located at Chain of Rocks, just below the mouth of the Missouri River has lately been established.

St. Louis ranks fourth among the manufacturing cities of the United States the value of its manufactured product in 1900 having been about $335,000,000. Chief among the articles manufactured are tobacco (the city being the largest tobacco mart as the world and turning out annually upward of 90,000,000 pounds of manufactured tobacco), malted liquors (upward of 30,000,000 gallons of beer per year), hardware, railroad-car, street-car, stoves, flour clothing, boots and shoes, wooden ware, sanitary-engineering supplies, drugs, blouses, meat products, bricks etc. The city is also the largest male market in the world. In its central position at the junction of upward of 30 important lines of railway and commanding the navigation of the Mississippi River St. Louis is a most important distributory for both manufactured articles and the produce of the soil its shipments of cotton (upward of 100,000 bales per year) bread-stuffs, live-stock wool, metal products, coal, hides, etc. being very heavy. It is noted as a drug market.

St. Louis was settled in 1764, when Pierre LaSalle Li-guest established a trading-post for furs. The settlement was within the limits of Louisiana, which had just been ceded by France to Spain. The site remained in the hands of the French until some years later. The purchase by President Jefferson of Louisiana (which had been retroceded by Spain to France) brought St. Louis in 1803 within the dominion of the United States. It had then about 1000 inhabitants. In 1822, soon after the admission of Missouri into the Union, St. Louis was chartered as a city. In 1830 the population was 6904. In 1840 15,489. In 1850 77,650. In 1860 169,773. In 1870 318,854. In 1880 350,518. In 1890 451,770. In 1900 575,238. The Louisiana Purchase Exposition (World's Fair) was held in the city in 1904.

Saint Petersburg (Russ. Sankt Peterburg sankt pyet' er bõrg') a government of European Russia, having on the N the Gulf of Finland and Lake Ladoga and on the W Lake Peypus and the river Narova. Area, exclusive of lakes, 17,350 sq. m. Inclusive of the water-surfaces 20,786 sq. m. Surface low and level and in part marshy. Nearly half is covered with forest. The region is well watered. The principal rivers in addition to the Narova, are the Volkhov entering Lake Ladoga, and the Neva, connecting Lake Ladoga with the Gulf of Finland. There is an extensive system of canals. Market-gardening and dairying are the principal branches of rural industry. The fisheries are important and much lumber is exported. Pop. in 1897 2,107,601. A considerable fraction of the rural inhabitants belong to the Finnish race.

Saint Petersburg, the capital of the Russian Empire and of the government of St. Petersburg, situated on the Neva, the outlet of Lake Ladoga, where that river enters the E end of the Gulf of Finland 400 miles NW of Moscow. Lat. of the observatory 59° 56' 33" N. lon 26° 17' 51" E. The Neva here divides into a number of arms, forming a delta, which is embraced within the city limits. There are 4 main arms, the Great and Little Neva and the Great and Little Nerka. The largest of the delta islands is the Vassili Ostrov (Vassili Island) between the Great Neva on the S. and the Little Neva on the N. The next largest is that formed by the Great and Little Neva and the Great and Little Nerka. This is subdivided by narrow waterways into 4 islands, —the Petersburg, Apothecary, and Petrovsky islands, and the inlet on which is the fortress of Peter and Paul. The main portion of St. Petersburg is on the main-land, occupying a peninsula washed on the E. by the Neva and on the NW by the Great Neva. The Vassili Ostrov contains the most important insular section of the city. The islands with their gardens and villas are a charming feature of the capital. The various parts of the city are connected by about 120 bridges, most of them spanning narrow canals, the longest, the new Trotsky Bridge, being a little more than one-third of a mile in length. St. Petersburg was built on a swamp. The land has been laboriously reclaimed and is still subject to overflow by the Neva. The water front is lined with massive granite quays. The city has a circuit of about 30 miles and an area of about 25 sq. m.

St. Petersburg is the administrative head-quarters of the Russian Empire and the seat of embassies but it yields to Moscow the distinction of being regarded as the focus of the national life of the Russian people. The city has a modern appearance, having just completed the second century of its existence. It is regularly laid out, with streets of generous width. It contains within a comparatively small area an extraordinary collection of edifices impressive by the beauty of their architecture or their great extent, and of imposing sculptural monuments. The quarters removed from the heart of the city present, however, in great part a dreary expanse of uninteresting streets, whose monotony is broken here and there by an open square or a stately edifice. Whole sections have little to show but a vast agglomeration of low wooden dwellings. The principal section of the city is included between the Great Neva and the curving canal called the Fontanka, a waterway about 50 yards in width. This is divided into 4 quarters, the principal of which is the Admiralty Quarter extending along the Great Neva. It takes its name from the Admiralty building, a structure dating from the earliest period of the city's history. This edifice, the seat of the ministry of the marine and containing the marine museum has a length of nearly 1000 feet. It faces the attractive Alexander Gardens on the SE. On the SW is the Peter Square, containing the famous colossal equestrian statue of Peter the Great, designed by Falconet, who was commissioned to execute the work by Catherine II. The pedestal is a block of granite about 15 yards long and 5 yards high weighing 1600 tons or more, which had to be transported a distance of several miles. Beyond the Peter Square are the buildings of the Senate and Holy Synod. A short distance from the SW corner of the Admiralty is the cathedral of St. Isaac, the most magnificent ecclesiastical structure of St. Petersburg, erected in the first half of the nineteenth century. With its porticoes whose columns are monoliths of polished red granite over 50 ft. high and its huge gilded dome, it presents an appearance hardly surpassed by that of any modern edifice. The splendor of the interior corresponds to the external effect. To the NE. of the Admiralty there is an array of palaces extending along the river front. The one nearest to the Admiralty is the famous Winter Palace, a vast pile facing the Neva on one side and the Palace Square on the other. This building, the imperial winter residence, is the work of three emperors, —Anna, Elizabeth and Catherine II. It contains a bewildering assemblage of sumptuous apartments adorned with innumerable works of painting and sculpture. In one of these apartments are the imperial regalia and crown jewels unsurpassed for their wealth of precious stones. Adjoining the Winter Palace is the Hermitage dating in part from the reign of Catherine II. but mostly the work of Nicholas I. It contains one of the leading museums of painting in the world and splendid collections of Greek and Roman sculpture, Greek antiquities and objects of art, vases, coins, etc. At the end of this series of stately edifices is the so-called Marble Palace erected by Catherine II. The Palace Square, SE. of the Winter Palace, contains the Alexander Column erected to the memory of Alexander I. the largest monolithic monument of modern times, the columnar part having a height of nearly 100 ft. On the SE side of the square is the imposing building of the General Staff.

From the Alexander Garden in front of the Admiralty the Nevsky Prospekt the principal thoroughfare of St. Petersburg extends in an easterly direction. It is a broad and stately boulevard, one of the handsomest avenues in Europe, lined in part with elegant shops, where the life of the capital reveals itself in its most animated and picturesque aspect. Among the prominent objects on the Nevsky Prospekt, or in close proximity to it, are the magnificent Knes Cathedral (early part of nineteenth century) having in front a great semicircular colonnade of Corinthian columns, the Dome (or my hall) the Gostiny Dvor a vast pile of buildings, whose arcades are lined with shops (the imperial library, the monument to Catherine II. (on the Alexandra Square) the fine Alexandra Theatre, the Antichkov Palace and the Antichkov Bridge over the Fontanka. In the angle formed by the Neva and the Fontanka, at the NE. end of the Admiralty Quarter is an extensive open space, comprising the Field of Mars, on which military parades on a vast scale are held, and the Summer Garden, laid out by Peter the Great. S. of the Field of Mars is the Mikhailovsky Garden with a splendid memorial obelisk erected on the spot where Alexander II was killed. On the S. side of this park is the Russian Museum of Alexander III. (new Michael Palace) one of the finest edifices in the city in Italian style, devoted to Russian art. On the E. side of the park is a grand palace (old Michael Palace) devoted to the military engineering service. Among the other notable edifices and monuments in the part of St. Petersburg situated on the main-land are the palace of the Council of State the building of the Corps of Pages the Conservatory (seating 4000 persons) the Imperial Bank the Tauric Palace with the fine Tauric Garden presented by Catherine II to Potemkin the Ismaïloff Cathedral the Cathedral of the Transfiguration the Cathedral of the Resurrection (belonging to the Smolny monastery) the Alexander Nevsky monastery (on the Neva at the SE corner of the city) an array of great structures devoted to military purposes (constituting a prominent feature of the city) a large number of extensive government buildings, the theatre, the great founding asylum, the hospital, many stately buildings devoted to art, music, and education, the monument to Nicholas I., the monument erected to commemorate the victories in the last war against Turkey, and the Moscow and Narva triumphal arches.

The part of the Vassili Ostrov (Basil Island) facing the Admiralty Quarter contains the splendid Bourso, the buildings of the university and of the Academy of Sciences, the Academy of Arts (with a museum), the Mining Institute, the zoological garden and the Semenov gallery of paintings, rich in works of Flemish and Dutch art. On a little island in the Great Nova, opposite the E end of the Admiralty Quarter is the fortress of Peter and Paul, dating from the infancy of the city. Here is the cathedral of Peter and Paul, containing the tombs of the Russian rulers from Peter the Great. Near by on the Petersburg Island, as the little wooden house in which Peter the Great lived when he began to lay out his capital. On the Apothecary Island is the botanical garden.

St. Petersburg is surpassed by few cities in respect to its educational and scientific institutions and learned bodies. The institutions of learning include the university (about 4000 students), Imperial School of Law Alexander Lyceum, Historico-Philological Institute, Academy of Military Medicine (an institution on a vast scale), Institute of Experimental Medicine, Technological Institute, Mining Institute (with immense collections), Institute of Civil Engineers, the Women's Medical Institute (about 1300 students), the institute of higher studies for women and the Imperial Academy of Arts. Among the societies for the advancement of sciences are the Imperial Academy of Sciences, the Russian Geographical Society, the Natural History Society and the Anthropological, Archaeological, Astronomical, Historical and Physico-chemical societies. The Imperial public library is one of the largest collections of books in the world, containing nearly 1,500,000 volumes. At Pulkovo, about 16 miles SW of the city is one of the leading observatories of Europe.

St. Petersburg is one of the great industrial centres of Russia. It has numerous cotton and woolen mills, iron foundries, machine-shops, paper mills, chemical-works, and glass-factories, and extensive manufactures of leather and glue. The city is the chief seat of the Russian book-trade. The vast domestic trade is greatly facilitated by the extent of the natural and artificial water communications. The value of the imports from foreign countries in 1921 was 145,000,000 rubles, and that of the exports 117,000,000 rubles. Cronstadt is an outer port of St. Petersburg and a great fortress guarding the approach to the city. Previous to 1833 sea-going vessels could not ascend beyond that place, but in that year a ship canal was opened which enables vessels of great draught to reach the capital.

The climate of St. Petersburg is on the whole a disagreeable one, fluctuations in the weather being frequent, the heat of summer often intolerable, and the number of wet and damp days very large. The winters are not very severe considering the latitude, the mean temperature of January being about 16°.

The population of the city inclusive of its suburbs in 1921 was 1,457,720. The number of inhabitants more than quintupled in the course of the nineteenth century. About seven-eighths of the population is Russian. The Germans, Poles, Finns, and Jews collectively contribute about 10 per cent. of the inhabitants. Among the suburban places are Tsarskoye-Selo, Pavlovsk, Peterhof, Oranienbaum and Gatchina.

St. Petersburg was founded by Peter the Great in 1703, in a territory which he had wrested from the Swedes. In 1712 the place was inaugurated as the capital of Russia. At the time of the death of Peter in 1723, it had already risen to be a populous city.
